Pop. 7,449. It contains a cathedral, 8 churches, 5 convents, and 3 hospitals. In 1655, a battle was fought near this town between the Moors and the Spaniards, in which the former were defeated with great loss. It withstood a vigorous siege against the Moors in 1697. It is situated in the narrowest part of the Mediterranean, not above 15 miles from Gibraltar.

Ceylon, isl. in the Indian sea, situated to the SE. of the peninsula of India, from which it is separated by a narrow sea, about 60 miles wide; of an oval form, 240 miles from N. to S. and where widest 135 from E. to W. Lon. 79. 50. to 82. 10. E. Lat. 5. 50. to 9. 51. N. This island was called by the ancients Taprobana, Salice, and Sieledeba; and is called by the natives Cingala, who are thence denominated Cingalese; the Arabians call it Serendib. It is exceedingly fertile, producing several kinds of rice, and all the fruits of the Indies; but the most valuable production is cinnamon; 340,000 lbs. of which are sent annually to England. The cinnamon of this island is esteemed the best in the world. Other productions are ginger, pepper, cardamoms, sugar, cotton, mangoes, long pepper, &c. Among the trees is one called the talipot, the trunk of which resembles a large mast crowned with long leaves at the top, one of which is said to be of sufficient magnitude to cover 15 persons.—Among the animals may be reckoned buffaloes, hogs, goats, deer, bears, tigers, monkeys, jackals, and elephants; which last are numerous, and are considered superior to those of any other part of the world, in beauty and sagacity.—Among the birds are peacocks, parrots, a black bird, called carlos, as large as a swan, which never lights on the ground, but always sits on trees, with short legs, large head, and long bill; partridges, woodcocks, snipes, sparrows, &c. Many serpents are found here, some of which are said to be of an uncommon size. Here are mines of gold, silver, and other metals, but only those of iron are permitted to be wrought. Precious stones are found of several sorts, as sapphires, topazes, hyacinths, turquoises, and the finest rubies in the world. Here are also valuable pearl fisheries.

The climate of Ceylon is much more temperate than that of India. In a great part of the island, the air is salubrious and delightful. The medium heat of the thermometer, according to Mr. Cordiner, is about 81 degrees, and nearly the same throughout the year.

Candi, a country in the interior, is very mountainous. Its chief town is of the same name.—The other principal towns in the island are Columbo, Point de Galle, and Trinkamaly.

Ceylon was visited by the Portuguese, in 1505, who maintained possession 153 years, but were expelled by the Dutch. The Dutch settlements were captured by the British, in 1796, and the island ceded to them, in 1801, by the peace of Amiens; and it now forms one of the British governments of India. The Cingalese are mostly pagans, the worshippers of Boodh, and are divided into castes. They are said to consist of 3 distinct races; the Veddahs or Beddahs, the native Cingalese, and the offspring of foreigners, by alliances with the natives. The Cingalese have a language, and use characters peculiar to themselves. Mr. Cordiner estimates the whole population at 1,500,000. This estimate, however, rests on no certain data. The number of native Christians has been stated at 200,000, of whom 50,000 are Catholics. Some estimate the number much higher.—In 1816, a mission was established in the district of Jaffna, in the northern part of Ceylon by the American Board. The 2 principal stations are at Tillipally and Batta Cotta. In 1820, the mission consisted of 6 ordained missionaries, a physician, and a printer; with 15 schools and about 700 children; besides a boarding school, containing 48 males, and 9 females.

This is the seat of the University of North Carolina, which was incorporated in 1793; and degrees were first conferred in 1797. The plan of the university embraces 3 buildings for the accommodation of students. Two of these are finished; the principal edifice and one wing, of brick. The other buildings are Person Hall, for public worship, a president's house, and houses for the steward. The funds consist of 30, or 40,000 dollars in bank stock, 50, or 60,000 acres of land, and all escheated property. There is a good chemical apparatus. The college library contains from 1,500 to 1,800 volumes, and there are 2 libraries belonging to 2 societies, each containing as many. The executive officers consist of a president, who is also professor of moral philosophy, and 4 professors, 1 of mathematics, 1 of chemistry, 1 of languages, and 1 of rhetoric; and 2 tutors. The number of students, in 1821, was 135. The board of trustees consists of 55 members; of which the governor of the state is, ex officio, president.

The commencement is held on the first Thursday in June, after which there is a vacation of 6 weeks; there is another vacation of 4 weeks in December.—It is a well regulated and flourishing institution. There is connected with it a preparatory school.

Pop. in 1790, 16,359; in 1800, 18,712; in 1810, 24,711; 11,668 whites, and 13,043 blacks; in 1820, 24,780; 5,323 free white males, 5,330 free white females; 12,552 slaves; 1,475 free people of colour.

It is situated on a tongue of land formed by the confluence of the rivers Cooper and Ashley, which unite just below the city, and form a spacious and convenient harbour, communicating with the ocean below Sullivan's island, 7 miles from Charleston. At the mouth of the harbour, there extends, from shore to shore, a sand bank, which, though dangerous to vessels, has openings by which they are navigated across it. The harbour is defended by fort Pinkney and fort Johnson, which are on islands, the former 2, and the latter 4 miles below the city; and by fort Moultrie on Sullivan's island.

Charleston contains a state house, a city hall, a custom house, a guard house, a theatre, an orphan house, a hospital, an alms house, 6 banks, including a branch of the U. S. bank, a college edifice, now occupied by a classical school, and 17 houses of public worship, 3 for Episcopalians, 3 for Presbyterians, 3 for Methodists, 2 for Congregationalists, 1 for Lutherans, 1 for Roman Catholics, 1 for French Protestants, 1 for Baptists, 1 for Friends, and a Jews' synagogue. Public worship is also held in the orphan house. There are 6 newspapers published here, 4 daily, and 2 thrice a week. The Charleston Library contains about 13,000 volumes, and the Franklin Library Society has about 2,000. The Orphan Asylum is a noble and well endowed institution, which supports and educates about 130 orphan children. Provision is made by the legislature for educating at the S. C. college, at the expense of the state, such boys as manifest extraordinary talents. There are several other charitable societies richly endowed, particularly the South Carolina Society, the St. Andrew's Society, and the Fellowship Society, instituted for the relief of widows and orphans.

The city is regularly laid out in parallel streets, which are intersected by others nearly at right angles. The tongue of land on which it is built, was originally indented with creeks and narrow marshes, which have been filled up, and it is drier and more elevated than most parts of the low country of S. Carolina. Many of the houses are elegant and furnished with piazzas. It is much the largest town in the state, and was formerly the seat of government. It has an extensive and flourishing commerce. The shipping owned here, in 1816, amounted to 36,473 tons; in 1820, to 28,403 tons. The number of vessels which, in 1816, arrived here from foreign ports, was 337; coastwise 882.

That dreadful distemper, the yellow fever, has made frequent ravages in Charleston; but its effects have been chiefly confined to persons from more northern situations; and the climate of the city is accounted healthy to the native inhabitants, more so than that of most other Atlantic towns in the southern states; and its superior salubrity attracts the planters from the surrounding country, and it is the favourite resort of the wealthy from the West Indies. It affords much agreeable society, and is reckoned one of the gayest towns in the United States.

Charlestown, p-t. Cheshire co. N. H., on the Connecticut; 12 N. Walpole, 30 S. Dartmouth College, 80 W. Portsmouth, W. 453. Lon. 72. 29. W. Lat. 42. 46. N. Pop. in 1810, 1,501; in 1820, 1,702. Here is a pleasant and handsome village, about half a mile from the river, containing a court-house, a jail, and a Congregational meeting house. A bridge is built here across the river. The courts for the county are held alternately here and at Keene.

Charlestown, p-t. Middlesex co. Mass.; 1 N. of the centre of Boston, with which it is connected by a fine bridge across Charles river; W. 437. Pop. in 1810, 4,959; in 1820, 6,591. It is a pleasant and flourishing town, much the largest in the county of Middlesex, and is advantageously situated for trade and manufactures. It contains the state prison, an insane hospital, United States' navy yard, an alms house, a market house containing a spacious town hall, 2 printing offices, and 4 houses for public worship, 2 for Congregationalists, 1 for Baptists, and 1 for Universalists. It has considerable trade, and various manufactures of pot and pearl ashes, rum, leather, particularly morocco, cordage, silver, tin, brass, pewter, and also ship building. It is a port of entry in conjunction with Boston. There are 2 bridges across Mystic river, one connecting Charlestown with Chelsea, the other connecting it with Malden. There is also another connecting the town with Craigie's bridge, leading to Cambridge.

The U. S. navy yard consists of about 60 acres of land, on which are built a large brick warehouse, several arsenals, magazines for various kinds of stores, a large brick mansion house for the superintending officer, and a marine hospital. The state prison is at the west end of the town, and is built of granite, 200 feet by 44, of 5 stories. The prison yard is 500 feet by 400, enclosed by a wall 15 feet high. The Massachusetts Insane Hospital, is delightfully situated upon Pleasant hill, on the west side of the town. It has an elegant house for the superintendant with buildings, one on each side, handsomely built of brick, 3 stories high. The General hospital, connected with this, is situated in Boston.

Bunker, Breed's, and Cobble, (now Pleasant) hills, celebrated in the history of the American revolution are in this town. Bunker Hill battle, so called, was fought on Breed's hill, June 17, 1775. In this battle the loss, in killed and wounded, of the British, was 1,055; of the Americans, 449.

It is situated at the bottom of a large bay, between cape Barfleur and cape la Hogue. Building of small vessels, and a manufacture of woollen stuffs, form the principal employment of the inhabitants. This port has always been considered by the French as an object of great importance in the navigation of the English channel, and immense sums have been expended in the erection of piers, deepening and enlarging the harbour, and erecting fortifications. After the peace of 1783, the French government determined to make Cherburg a great naval depot, and at different attempts, before 1808, expended more than £2,000,000 in constructing a vast bulwark, to break the water, rendering the road a safe anchorage. Afterwards, under Bonaparte, a basin was formed 1,000 feet long, 770 wide, occupying 18 acres; having a depth of 50 feet, and capable of containing 50 sail of the line. In addition to this, a wet dock has been constructed of equal dimensions. The cost of the basin and dock was nearly £5,000,000.

Cherokee Corner, p-v. Oglethorpe co. Georgia; 8½ miles from Athens, W. 675.

Cherokees, Indians, in the SE. part of Tennessee, NW. part of Georgia, and the NE. part Alabama. The Tennessee river forms a part of their northern boundary. The greatest length of the Cherokee country is about 250 miles, and the breadth from 100 to 150. Before the late cession of a small portion of their territory, the number of acres was estimated at 15,054,720, or 23,520 square miles. They have about 65 towns and villages, containing from 50 to 500 souls each. Since agriculture has been introduced among them, they live in a more dispersed manner than they formerly did. Their habitations are log cabins. Intermarriages have in many instances taken place between the Cherokees and the whites, who live among them or in the neighbourhood, and some of the mixed breed have large plantations, and carry on agriculture with more spirit and success than the full blooded Cherokees. Pop. in 1809, 12,395; males 6,116; females 6,279; negro slaves 583; whites 341. Horses, 6,519; black cattle 19,165; sheep 1,037; swine 19,778; grist mills 13, saw mills 3; wagons 30; total value, including the slaves, estimated at $571,500.

The rivers of the country are the Tennessee; Sequatchee creek, Battle creek, and Crow creek, which flow into the Tennessee from the N.; Tellico, Hiwassee, Chickamaugah creek, Lookout creek, Racoon creek, and Wills creek, flowing into it from the south; the Coosa with its head branches Oostanaulee and Etowee, the Talapoosa, and the Chatahoochee.

The face of the country is diversified; part mountainous, part hilly, and part very level. The principal mountains are Cumberland mountains and Walden's Ridge, north of the Tennessee; south of the river are Lookout mountain and Unicoi mountains. Racoon mountain and others, of the Alleghany range are in the eastern part.—The soil in most of the low ground and some of the upland, is very fertile. In the low and marshy ground fever and ague prevails; but in the upland country the climate is salubrious and delightful.

The Cherokees have made considerable attainments in the useful arts, particularly in the manufacture of cotton and woollen cloth, and in agriculture. They have upwards of 500 looms and 500 ploughs. They generally adopt the modes of dress common among white people, and are very neat and cleanly in their persons, and are universally in the practice of bathing. They are well formed, in some instances possess fine countenances, have good natural capacity, and are of hospitable character. The Moravians have a missionary among them at Spring Place; and the American Board of Commissioners have also an establishment at Brainerd; and schools have been established in various places.—Several years since a part of the Cherokees emigrated to the Arkansas territory, and have settled on both sides of the river Arkansas, 400 or 500 miles from its mouth, occupying a fertile tract of country. Their number is estimated at 6,000. A missionary establishment has been formed among them at Dwight. See Brainerd, Dwight, &c.

Cherso, or rather Cherso and Osero, (an. Crepse, Brigeide, Absyrtides, and Absyrtius,) isl. in the gulf of Venice, subject to Austria, divided into two parts. This island or islands lie between the coast of Istria and Dalmatia, extending from N. to S. about 60 miles in length, with a very unequal breadth. The soil is in general mountainous and stony, and produces olives, wine, figs, silk, a little corn; and is said to support 70,000 sheep. Lon. 14. 36. E. Lat. 45. 8. N. Pop. 6,003. Sq. m. 160.

Cherso, s-p. & capital of the island of Cherso, in the Adriatic. Pop. 3,572. Bp. see. It is situated behind a deep bay on the W. coast, which almost divides the island nearly into equal parts, forming a harbour capable of sheltering a numerous fleet. The streets are narrow and dirty. The usual language is the Sclavonian.

Cherson, gov. Russia, bounded N. by Kiow and Poltava, E. by Ekaterinoslav, and Taurida, S. by the Black sea, SW. by Besserabia, and W. by Moldavia. Pop. 300,000; or according to other statements 499,000. Sq. miles about 19,000.

Cherson, Kherson, or Koslov, t. Russia, capital of a government of the same name, on the Dnieper, 60 m. above its mouth; 128 SW. Ekaterinoslav, 812 S. Petersburg. Lon. 32. 54. E. Lat. 46. 40. N. The population of this town has been very fluctuating; about 10 years after its foundation it is said to have contained nearly 50,000; while in 1803, after the ruin of its trade, there were not above 10,000. It was founded as lately as 1778, chiefly by the exertions of prince Potemkin, made a free port, and was expected to become the centre of the commerce of the Black sea. But from the bad choice of its situation, the difficulty of navigating the Dnieper, and the unhealthiness of its climate, it gradually fell into decline, and is now completely eclipsed by the neighbouring port of Odessa. It contains a dock for the construction of large vessels; from which several men of war and frigates, as well as merchantships, have been launched.—The humane Mr. Howard died in this town, on the 20th day of January, 1790.

Chester, p-t. Rockingham co. N. H., on the east side of the Merrimack river and Manchester, 6 NNE. Londonderry, 15 NNW. Haverhill, 22 SSE. Concord, 30 W. by S. Portsmouth, W. 490. Pop. in 1810, 2,030; in 1820, 2,262. The township extends southeast about 20 miles in length, and is of various breadth, and has 2 meeting houses. The principal village consists of a single street about a mile in length, situated on an elevated swell of land, commanding a very extensive view, embracing the ocean to the southeast, 22 miles distant. The Isle of Hookset Falls, on the Merrimack, are near the NW. corner of the township, and Massabesic pond lies mostly in the western part.

In this township are 2 remarkable caves. One, called the Devil's den, is in Mine hill in the western part, on the east side of Massabesic pond. The hill is about $\frac{1}{2}$ mile in diameter, about 400 feet high, almost perpendicular on the south side. The entrance of the cave, which is on the south side, is 10 yards above the base, and after a passage of various dimensions, 25 feet in length, opens into the principal apartment, which is 15 or 20 feet square, 3 or 4 feet high, floored and ceiled by a regular rock. From the wall are dependent numerous excrescences of the form and size of pears, which on the approach of a torch, throw out a sparkling lustre with innumerable hues. The other cave is on the west side of Rattle-snake hill, 7 SW. of the east meeting house. The principal entrance is 11 feet high and 4 wide. It extends about 20 feet into the side of the hill, and after forming a semi-circle of 53 feet in length, passes out on the same side. Its greatest breadth is near the middle, about 15 feet, and its greatest height is at the principal entrance, 11 feet.

The city is square, and surrounded by a wall, nearly two miles in circ.; it contains a cathedral, 9 parish churches, a Roman Catholic chapel, and 8 places of worship for Dissenters of different persuasions. The streets are hollowed out of a rock to the depth of one story beneath the level of the ground on each side; and the houses have a sort of covered portico running on from house to house, and from street to street, level with the ground behind, but one story above the street in front. The castle is a noble structure; the walls are evidently Norman. It has 2 yearly fairs, the most considerable in the north of England, held on the 5th July and 10th Oct., each lasting 14 days. The manufactures are not extensive; they consist chiefly of tobacco, snuff, shot, white lead, iron, tobacco pipes, and leather. It sends 2 members to parliament.

The boundary line commences on the Mississippi a little below Lat. 34. N., proceeds up this river to the entrance of the Ohio; up the Ohio to the junction of the Tennessee; up the Tennessee to Cany creek, about 20 miles below the Muscle shoals; up Cany creek to its source, thence in a line to the Tombigbee, down this river to the mouth of Oketibbeha, where it meets the Choctaw line; and from this point in a north-west direction to its commencement on the Mississippi. A large portion of the country is very fertile and valuable.

The Chickasaws, according to the statement of Col. Cocke, the United States' agent for this tribe, consist of 6,456 souls, of whom 680 are warriors. The number of males to females is stated as 4 to 1. This inequality is imputed to the practice of polygamy, which is extremely prevalent among this tribe. The Chickasaws are considerably advanced in many of the arts of civilized life.

CHILI, country, S. A. bounded N. by Buenos Ayres, E. by Buenos Ayres and Patagonia, from which it is separated by the Andes, S. by Patagonia, and W. by the Pacific ocean. Lon. 69. to 74. W. Lat. 24. to 45. S.; about 1,400 long, and from 100 to 200 broad. Sq. m. about 200,000. Pop. stated in 1806, at 720,000; by Malte-Brun, in 1820, and a Spanish journal, at 900,000. Another statement, said to be founded on a census, makes it 1,200,000, exclusive of independent Indians.

Divisions. It is divided into 2 intendencies, St. Jago and Concepcion, which are subdivided into 13 provinces, viz. Copiapo, Coquimbo, Quillota, Aconcagua, Melipilla, St. Jago, Rancagua, Colchagua, Maule, Itata, Chillan, Puchacay, and Huilquilemu.—The islands are Coquimbanes, Mugillan, Totoral, Pajaro, Masapiero, Juan Fernandes, Mocha, and the Archipelago of Chiloe.

Chief towns. The chief towns are St. Jago, the capital, Concepcion, Valparaiso, Valdivia, Chillan, Coquimbo, St. Fernando, and Petorca.

Rivers. The rivers are numerous, but small, and have generally rapid currents. Some of the principal ones are the Maule, Biobio, Cauten, Tolten, Valdivia, Chaivin, Bueno, and Sinfondo.

Face of the country and soil. Chili presents a plain, gradually rising in elevation as it recedes from the coast and approaches the Andes. From this sloping conformation it is fertilized and beautified by numerous rivers flowing from the Andes; and of these, 53 communicate directly with the Pacific ocean. The country, intercepted between the foot of the Andes and the Pacific ocean, is divided into 2 equal parts, the maritime and midland. The maritime part is intercepted by 3 ridges of mountains, running parallel with the Andes, between which are numerous well watered valleys. The midland country is generally level, of great fertility, and enjoying a delightful climate. The great chain of the Andes extends throughout towards the eastern limits, and presents a number of summits, the height of which has been estimated at upwards of 20,000 feet. Among the Chilian Andes there are said to be 14 volcanoes in a state of constant eruption, and a still greater number that discharge smoke at intervals.

Productions. Chili abounds with vegetable, animal, and mineral productions. Maize, rye, barley, pulse, wine, oil, sugar, cotton, and fruits of various kinds, are cultivated. It has luxuriant pastures, which feed numerous herds of cattle. It is rich in mines of gold, silver, copper, tin, and iron. All the metals are found; also a variety of earths and precious stones. It is free from dangerous or venomous animals, which are so much dreaded in hot countries, and has but one species of small serpent, and that perfectly harmless.

Climate. The climate is remarkably salubrious, and the weather generally serene. In the northern provinces it rarely rains, in some parts never, but dews are abundant; in the central part, rain often continues 3 or 4 days in succession, followed by 15 or 20 days of fair weather; in the southern provinces rains are much more abundant, and often continue 9 or 10 days without cessation. The rainy season commences in April, and continues through August. Snow falls abundantly on the Andes, but is never seen on the coast. Earthquakes are common.

Government. Chili was formerly a colony of Spain, but in 1810 the people took the government into their own hands, and in 1818 made a declaration of absolute independence, which has been hitherto uninterrupted, and recently acknowledged by Portugal. The new government is republican. The army in 1818 was stated at 8,400 regular troops; the militia at 28,960 men, and the revenue at $2,177,967.

Indians. The part of Chili lying south of the river Biobio, in Lat. 36. 44. S., is inhabited chiefly by Indians. The Araucanians inhabit the country between the rivers Biobio and Valdivia. They are enthusiastically attached to liberty, and are implacable enemies of the Spaniards, who have never been able to subdue them.

Chimborazo, mt. S. A. in Quito, province of Riobamba; about 100 S. by W. Quito. Lat. about 2. S. It is the most elevated summit of the Andes, rising to the height of 21,440 feet above the level of the sea, and covered with perpetual snow 2,600 feet from the summit, and upwards. It presents a magnificent spectacle when seen from the shores of the Pacific ocean, after the long rains of winter, when the transparency of the air is suddenly increased, and when its enormous circular summit is seen projected upon the deep azure blue of the equatorial sky. The great rarity of the air, through which the tops of the Andes are seen, adds very much to the splendour of the snow, and aids the magical effect of its reflection.

This mountain was ascended in 1802 by Humboldt and Bonpland, who reached to within 2,140 feet of the summit, being by barometrical measurement, 19,300 feet above the level of the sea; a greater elevation than ever was before attained by man. Their further ascent was prevented by a chasm 500 feet wide. The air was intensely cold and piercing, and, owing to its extreme rarity, blood oozed from their lips, eyes, and gums; and respiration was difficult. One of the party fainted, and all of them felt extreme weakness. Condamine ascended, in 1745, to the height of 15,815.

CHINA, country, Asia, called by the Chinese,

Tchong-kou, or The Middle Kingdom. The Western Moguls called it Catay; the Mantchew Tartars, Nican-courou; the Japanese, Thau; and the people of Cochin-china and Siam, Cin. China, properly so called, lies between Lon. 100. and 122. E. Lat. 21. and 44. N.; bounded N. by Chinese Tartary, E. by the ocean, S. by the ocean, Tonquin, Cochin-china, and Laos, and W. by Thibet and Chinese Tartary. The western boundary is formed by mountainous tracts and deserts, but little known. Sq. m. about 1,300,000; according to Templemann, 1,486,000; Hassel, 1,724,000. It is divided into 15 provinces. The adjacent countries subjected to the Chinese government, such as the islands of Hainan and Formosa, Leaotong and Tartary, are not included in this estimation; for if we reckon from the most southern point of the island of Hainan to the northern extremity of Tartary, which is under the dominion of the emperor of China, we shall find that the territories of this prince are more than 2,700 miles in extent from N. to S. and about 4,500 miles from E. to W., reckoning from the Eastern sea as far as the country of Cashgar, conquered by the Chinese, in 1759.

The population of China, which has been the subject of keen dispute and much calculation, has been variously estimated. According to a Chinese publication, the number of families paying taxes, in 1743, was 28,514,488, which at 5 to each family, would give 142,572,440. Some statistical reports recently translated by Dr. Morrison, give the result of a census made by the late emperor, Kia-Kin, at about 145,000,000. Father Amiot calculates it at 200,000,000, but M. de Guignes thinks 150,000,000 the highest probable estimate. Travellers agree in asserting the appearances of a crowded population. Estimating the population at 200,000,000, and the square miles at 1,300,000, would give about 154 to a square mile, a density not equal to some countries in Europe. The following table exhibits three statements in a more detailed form; but by a comparative view of their variations, one may readily detect their complete inconsistency. The statement for the year 1743 is founded upon the report of the French missionaries; that for 1761, upon the authority chiefly of Father Allerstein; and that for 1794 was communicated to the English embassy by the Chinese officers of state.

According to the statements of the Chinese, these 15 provinces contain 4,402 cities, and the sea coasts are defended by 439 castles, and covered by 2,920 towns; many of which, in population and extent, are equal to walled cities; while the villages, scattered over the interior, are declared to be innumerable. There are also, according to the same authorities, 1,145 royal hospitals, 1,159 triumphal arches, 208 monuments dedicated to the memory of virtuous females, and 272 public libraries.

Revenue, &c. M. De Guignes calculates the amount of the revenue of the Chinese empire at £31,555,555 sterling; and the amount of the expenditure at £22,222,222 sterling. According to the statement of the Chinese government to lord Macartney, the amount of their standing army, even in times of peace, is 1,000,000 infantry, and 800,000 cavalry; but M. De Guignes estimates the whole at 842,000.

Cities. The principal cities are Peking, the capital, Canton, the chief port, Nankin, Singan, and Hang-cheou.

Rivers. The Hoang-ho and Kiang-ku, or Yang-tse, are two of the largest rivers in Asia.

Face of the country. The face of the country is much diversified, though much of it is level, intersected by numerous rivers and canals, with occasional mountains. The principal mountainous tracts are in the northern and western parts. Lakes and swamps are numerous, and are said to cover one fourth part of the country.

Climate. The northern parts are said to be colder than countries under the same parallel in Europe; in the south the climate is hot, but the air is generally healthy, and the people commonly live to a great age.

Soil and Productions. A great part of China has a fertile soil. The prevailing crop in the southern provinces is rice. Tea, barley, millet, wheat, buck wheat, maize, pease, and beans are common. Tea is the most celebrated vegetable product. It is the leaf of a shrub, which grows both in mountainous and level districts, but flourishes best in a light rocky soil. The shrubs yield crops of leaves, 3 years after being sown, but require to be renewed every 5 or 6 years.

Agriculture. The land is under very excellent cultivation, and agriculture is held in high estimation. The emperor annually, at the vernal equinox, performs the ceremony of holding the plough; an example, in which he is followed by all the great officers throughout the empire.

Exports. The most important exports are tea, silk, nankins, porcelain, sugar, cinnamon, and camphor.

Minerals. The principal minerals are gold, silver, mercury, copper, lapis lazuli, loadstone, and marble.

Canals. The inland navigation, by means of rivers and canals, which every where abound, is unparalleled. The Imperial Canal is the greatest work of the kind in the world. It extends from Peking to the Kiang-ku, about 600 miles. It is said to have employed 30,000 men upwards of 40 years in its construction.

The Chinese Wall. The great wall, which bounds China on the north, is the most enormous fabric in the world. It is 1,500 miles long, passing over a vast chain of mountains ; 30 feet high, on the plain, 15 or 20 when carried over rocks and elevated grounds ; and of such thickness that 6 horsemen can easily ride abreast upon it. It is said to have been completed 214 years before the christian era.

Inhabitants. The Chinese, from their physiognomy and general appearance, exhibit proofs of Mongul origin. They have a square, flat face, small nose, but broad at the root, pale yellow complexion, and long black hair. Their hair is plaited into a tail, reaching from the crown of the head sometimes as low as the calf of the leg, the rest of the scalp being closely shaven. According to the ideas of the Chinese, the chief beauty of the females consists in the smallness of their feet, which are swathed from earliest infancy, in order to prevent their growing to the natural size. In their character the Chinese are represented as remarkably vain, timid, artful, jealous, and vindictive. Drunkenness is very uncommon. Polygamy is permitted ; and women are in a state of the most abject degradation.

Religion. The prevailing religion is a species of Shamanism, which exists here under the title of the religion of Fo ; but no religion is established or supported by the government. Temples and pagodas, however, are every where common, and daily open for the visits of devotees.

Government. The government is patriarchal and despotic, watchful and jealous, though not violent. The emperor is styled, "Holy Son of heaven, sole Governor of the earth, great Father of his people." Nobility and qualification for office depend entirely on literary distinction. The chief officers are styled mandarins. Of these there are 9 orders. The highest class are viceroys, or governors of provinces ; the lowest are entrusted with the collection of the revenue. The penal code is severe ; but executions are not numerous, in proportion to the number of the inhabitants.

Literature. Learning, to a certain degree, is much encouraged. No person can become a mandarin, till he has obtained at least 2 degrees in literature. The Chinese are a reading people, and every town and village has its school. The art of printing was practised in China before its invention in Europe. It is not performed, however, with moveable types, but with blocks of wood. The only vehicle of political information is the official gazette, which is published daily at Pekin, and circulated throughout the empire.

Language. The Chinese language is entirely original and unique. The art of writing is considered as a modification of the hieroglyphical mode. The number of characters is computed at 35,000, or 40,000 ; one third of which is more than sufficient for the common purposes of life, and for understanding most of their books. The effective elements of the characters is stated at 130, or at most 214.

Commerce. The Chinese empire is quite unrivalled with regard to inland navigation, which is facilitated by innumerable rivers and canals. It has been asserted, that a number of people, equal to the whole population of Great Britain, subsist entirely on the water. Internal trade is carried on by the simplest form of barter. Foreign commerce is viewed with a jealous eye, from the assumption, that China, on account of the multitude of her varied productions, stands in no need of foreign intercourse. Europeans are allowed to trade only at two points, at Kiachta, the emporium for the overland trade of Russia ; and at Canton, which is appropriated to the maritime states. The imports of Great Britain from China, in 1811, amounted to 21,231,849 pounds of tea, 81,397 pounds of silk, 316,616 pieces of nankins, miscellaneous articles to the value of £9,630 ; total value £3,660,830. Value of exports to China the same year, woollens £896,137, lead 56,783, miscellaneous 11,245 ; total £963,715.

Choctaws, or Flat Heads, Indians, residing between the Mississippi and the Tombigbee, partly in Alabama, but mostly in Mississippi. Their territory is bounded N. and NE. by that of the Chickasaws. Their number is estimated at about 20, or 25,000. They are a hardy, intrepid, and ingenious race, and have made, within the last 20 years, great advances in agriculture and other arts of civilized life. They raise cotton, and manufacture it into cloth for their ordinary use, and often appear well clad in garments of their own making.—In 1818, the American Board of Foreign Missions established a mission among the Indians at Elliot, on the Yalo Busha, a branch of the Yazoo; and another establishment has been since made on the Ook-tib-beha creek, a branch of the Tombigbee. The mission has hitherto prospered. According to a late report, there were belonging to it 200 neat cattle, a blacksmith's shop, various implements of husbandry, and mechanic tools, and a school house, containing 60 or 70 children.

Cholula, t. Mexico, in Puebla; 60 E. Mexico. Lon. 98. 8. W. Lat. 19. 2. N. Pop. 16,000. It was formerly a city of Anahuac, containing in the time of Cortes, according to his account, 40,000 houses, independent of the adjoining villages or suburbs, which he computed at as many more. Its commerce consisted in manufactures of cotton, gems, and plates of clay; and it was much famed for its jewellers and potters. With respect to religion, it may be said that Cholula was the Rome of Anahuac. The surprising multitude of temples, of which Cortes mentions that he counted more than 400, and in particular the greater temple erected upon an artificial mountain, which is still existing, drew together innumerable pilgrims. This temple, which is the most ancient and celebrated of all the Mexican religious monuments, is 164 feet in perpendicular height, and at the base it measures on each side 1,450 feet. It has 4 stories of equal height, and appears to have been constructed exactly in the direction of the 4 cardinal points. It is built in alternate layers of clay and bricks, and is supposed to have been used both as a temple and a tomb.

Circæum, now Monte Circello.

Circar, name given in Hind., to a tract of country, which, in the opinion of Maj. Rennel, is not very dissimilar to the term county, in England, few of them being of less extent than the largest English county.

Circars, (Northern.) These are five circars, lying to the north of the Carnatic, or Madras; Cicacole, Condapilly, Ellore, Rajamundry, and Guntoor. The first four occupy the sea-coast from the Chilka lake, on the confines of Catak, to the northern bank of the river Kistnah, forming, comparatively, a long, narrow slip of country, 350 miles long, and from 20 to 75 wide. The English have divided the country into five collectorships, Ganjam, Vizagapatam, Rajamundry, Masulipatam, and Guntoor. The country is well watered, the soil fertile, producing abundance of rice, all other kinds of grain, tobacco, sugar, and cotton. The manufactures are salt, muslins, chintzes, calicoes, &c. Pop. estimated at 2,500,000, mostly Hindoos. Sq. geo. m. 17,000.

Circassia, in Russian Tcherkess, country, Asia, occupying a great part of the territory between the Black and Caspian seas. Its extent and boundaries are not well defined, but have been stated as follows; bounded N. by the river Don, E. by the Caspian sea and the mouths of the Volga, S. by Mount Caucasus and the Black sea, and W. by the Black sea and sea of Azof. The country is pleasantly diversified with mountains, valleys, woods, lakes, and rivers; not wanting in natural fertility, but badly cultivated. It is included in the Russian government of Caucasus; inhabited by a multitude of small, independent, and hostile tribes. These tribes acknowledge a species of vassalage to Russia, but neither pay tribute, nor perform military service. The government is a feudal aristocracy, similar to that which existed in Europe, in the 12th century. The favourite occupation of the Circassians is war, and their chief pride is placed in their arms and their horses. Their agricultural produce is barely sufficient for their own use. They raise many sheep and bees; their grain is chiefly millet, with a little barley and maize. Their principal traffic consists in slaves, honey, wax, skins of cattle, deer, and tigers.

The Circassians were partially converted to Mahometanism during the last century; a part of them formerly professed Christianity; but their religion is, in a great degree, paganism. They are remarkably distinguished by the elegance of their external appearance. The men are tall, of an athletic, though slender form; their features expressive, their air haughty and martial. The beauty of the females has been long celebrated, both in Europe and the East; and Circassian captives are esteemed the brightest ornaments of an eastern seraglio. Every care is taken to preserve this valued quality. The Circassian or Georgian girls are sold for the seraglios of Turkey and Persia, from £20 to £100, according to their beauty. The merchants, who come to purchase them, are mostly Jews.

Circleville, p-t. & cap. Pickaway co, Ohio, on E. side the Scioto; 18 N. Chillicothe, 24 S. Columbus, W. 424. Lon. 81. W. Lat. 39. 40. N. The site of the town consists of 2 ancient forts, nearly equal in size, and adjacent to each other; one an exact circle, the other an exact square, each of its sides being 55 rods long. The circle is surrounded by two walls of earth, enclosing a ditch; the square by a single wall, about 10 feet high, where it is not removed. The walls of the circular fort were about 20 feet high, measuring from the bottom of the ditch. The town of Circleville covers all the circle, from which it derives its name, and the western half of the square. These walls will almost entirely disappear in a few years. The town is esteemed a curiosity, on account of its site and form. It is situated 3 miles N. of the Pickaway Plains, in a fertile country; is a flourishing town, and contains an elegant brick octagonal court house, a market house, and has considerable trade.

Cologne, or Cologn, a secularized archbishopric & electorate, Ger., in Lower Rhine, divided into several districts by other estates, now forming a part of the Prussian province of Juliers-Cleves-Berg. The greater part was situated upon the Rhine, between the duchies of Juliers and Berg; another part between Juliers and Treves; the duchies of Recklinghausen and Westphalia form another. The soil is unequal; being composed of mountains and forests, sandy lands, and fertile fields; there is plenty of game, fish, and mineral springs, and vineyards, from which is made excellent wine. The inhabitants are in general Catholics. Pop. 217,000. It now forms the greater part of the Prussian government of Cologne.

Cologne, (an. Colonia Agrippina), city, Pru., capital of a government, in the province of Juliers-Cleves-Berg, formerly capital of an archbishopric, to which it gave name, founded by the Ubii; 20 SSE. Dusseldorf, 80 NNE. Treves, 95 NW. Frankfort-on-the-Maine. Lon. 6. 55. E. Lon. 50. 55. N. Pop. 49,150. H. 7,404. It contains a cathedral, 9 collegiate churches, 19 Catholic parish churches, 17 monasteries, 39 nunneries, 49 chapels, 19 hospitals, a Catholic gymnasium, and a Protestant consistory. It is built in the form of a crescent, on the borders of the Rhine, and fortified in the ancient manner. The streets are narrow, winding, and gloomy, and the houses ill built. The walls have a number of towers, and are about 7 miles in circuit. Cologne has long held a conspicuous rank in Catholic Germany, both from the influence of its university, and the number and zeal of its clergy. In 1794, the ecclesiastics of all ranks amounted to at least 2,000. The university, which was established in 1388, was suppressed by the French, who erected in its stead a lyceum, to which is attached an extensive library, a museum, a philosophical apparatus, and a botanic garden.

Cologne, from its favourable situation, has been long noted for its commerce, and was once regarded as one of the 4 principal Hanse towns.—Natives, Agrippa, Rubens, Anna Maria Schurman, Vondel, and Vorstius.—Pop. of the government 321,608. Sq. m. 1,462. It is divided into 11 circles.

COLOMBIA, (Republic of), South America, formed of the late viceroyalty of New Grenada and the captain-generalship of Carraccas, or republic of Venezuela; bounded N. by the Caribbean sea, E. by Dutch, French, and Portuguese Guiana, S. by Amazonia and Peru, from which it is separated by the Amazon, and W. by the Pacific ocean. Lon. 58. to 82. W. Lat. 12. 30. N. to 6. S. Pop. stated by Malte-Brun, in 1820, and by a Spanish journal, at 2,500,000; New Grenada 1,600,000, & Venezuela 900,000.

Towns. The principal towns are Santa Fe de Bogota, the capital of New Grenada; Caracas, and St. Thomas, capitals of Venezuela; Quito, Popayan, Carthagena, Cuenca, Riobamba, Otobalo, Guayaquil, Merida, Panama, Cumana, Maracaybo, Barcelona, and Truxillo.

Rivers. It is watered by the great river Orinoco, and its branches. The Amazon forms the southern boundary; and the country is watered by many of its tributaries. The other principal river is the Magdalena.

Mountains. The ranges of the Andes extend through the country. Towards the southern part of it are found the celebrated summits of Chimborazo, Antesana, Pichinca, Cotopaxi, Cayamba, Ourcou, and Altair.

The face of the country, soil, and productions are various. New Grenada is rich in minerals, and Venezuela abounds in cattle.—See New Grenada and Venezuela.

On the 17th Dec. 1819, the congress of Venezuela, at St. Thomas of Angostura, made a declaration of the fundamental law of union of the republic of Colombia. On the 17th July 1821, the representatives of New Grenada and Venezuela, in general congress, at the city of Rosario de Cucuta, declared the following, among others, fundamental laws of the union of the people of Colombia; that the people of New Grenada and Venezuela be united in one body, as a nation, under the name of the Republic of Colombia; that the government be popular and representative; the nation free and independent of the Spanish monarchy, as well as of all other foreign powers; that the government consist of legislative, executive, and judiciary authorities; that the territory be divided into 6 or more departments, having an administration dependent on the national government; that when the state of the nation shall admit, a new city shall be founded, as the capital of the republic, which shall bear the name of the liberator, Bolivar, the site to be determined by congress; that there be an annual national festival of three days, on Dec. 25th, 26th, and 27th.

The republic has been divided into 7 departments, viz. Venezuela, Sulia, Boyacca, Cundinamarca, Magdalena, Cauca, and Orinoco. In 1821, a law was passed, establishing a uniform system of education, and instituting in each of the provinces a college, with at least 2 professors. The constitution is said to resemble that of the United States, but the president is elected for 7 years.

flourishing town, and has considerable trade, chiefly in lumber. It contains a bank, and 3 houses of public worship, 1 for English Presbyterians, 1 for German Presbyterians, and 1 for Methodists. A large proportion of the houses are handsomely built with brick. Here is erected across the Susquehanna an excellent covered bridge, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile in length, which cost 230,000 dollars.

Columbia, (District of,) tract of country 10 miles square, on both sides of the Potomac, about 120 miles from its mouth, ceded to the United States, by Virginia and Maryland in 1790. It includes the cities of Washington, Alexandria, and Georgetown. It is under the immediate government of Congress. Pop. in 1810, 24,028; slaves, 5,395. Pop. in 1820, 32,039. The exports of this district, in 1816, amounted to 1,680,811 dollars.

Columbia, p-t. & cap. S. C., in Richland district; 35 SW. Camden, 73 NE. Augusta, 120 NNW. Charleston, W. 507. Lon. 81. 7. W. Lat. 33. 57. N. Pop. in 1816, 2,058, of whom 1,031 were whites. It is situated opposite to the confluence of the Saluda and Broad rivers, which unite to form the Congaree. From the river there is a gradual ascent for one mile; then commences a plain of between 2 and 3 miles in extent, gradually descending on every side. This elevated plain forms the site of the town, which presents a handsome and extensive prospect. The town was formed in 1787. It is regularly laid out. The streets intersect each other at right angles, and are 100 feet wide.

Columbia is a flourishing town, and contains a statehouse, a court house, a jail, a market house, a branch of the state bank of S. C., an academy for males, and one for females, a college, and 4 houses of public worship, 1 for Episcopalians, 1 for Presbyterians, 1 for Baptists, and 1 for Methodists. The state house is of 2 stories, 170 feet by 60; and is situated in the central part of the town. The Presbyterian church is an elegant edifice, presenting in its front two lofty spires; and the Episcopal church has a bell and an organ. The houses display much taste and elegance. They are mostly of wood; but the taste for building with brick is now predominating. A steam boat plies between this town and Charleston.

The South Carolina College was founded in this town in 1802, but the first graduation did not take place till 1807. It is under the liberal patronage of the state legislature, from which it receives an annual grant of 10, or 12,000 dollars. The college buildings are two edifices, of 3 stories, about 210 feet long, and 25 wide, containing a chapel, recitation rooms, and rooms for the accommodation of students. These buildings stand opposite to each other; at the head of the opening between them, stands the president's house, a large building. In a range below on one side are two large tenements for two professors, and a steward's house; on the other side are two similar tenements for professors, and a large building containing the philosophical apparatus, and library, with an observatory upon its summit. These buildings are all of brick, and regularly arranged, and make an impressive appearance. The library contains about 5,000 volumes. The chemical apparatus and the philosophical are both extensive, and cost upwards of 7,000 dollars.

The board of trustees is composed of the governor, lieutenant governor, president of the senate, speaker of the house of representatives, the judges of the state, together with 13 members elected by the legislature every 4 years. The executive government is entrusted to a president, 4 professors, 1 of languages, 1 of moral philosophy and logic, 1 of chemical and experimental philosophy and mineralogy, and 1 of mathematics, mechanical philosophy, and astronomy; and 2 tutors. The number of students, in 1818, was upwards of 100. There is but one session in a year, which continues 9 months, and one vacation of 3 months, commencing about the 1st of July. The commencement is held on the 1st Monday in December, during the sitting of the legislature.

Columbia, r. North America, which rises according to Mackenzie, in the Rocky mountains, about Lon. 121. W. Lat. 54. 23. N., within a few miles of the source of the Unijah or Peace river; and after a course of about 1,500 miles, it flows into the Pacific ocean between Point Adams and Cape Disappointment, Lon. 123. 54. W. Lat. 46. 19. N. The three great tributaries of this river are the Multnomah, Lewis's river, and Clark's river, all flowing into it on SE. side; the Multnomah 139 miles from its mouth, Lewis's river 413, and Clark's 600 miles. At the point of the junction of Lewis's river the Columbia is 960 yards wide. The tide flows up 183 miles, to within 7 miles of the great rapids. Vessels of 300 tons may reach the Multnomah, and large sloops may ascend as high as the tide. Above the rapids the navigation is good for 65 miles, where it is interrupted by the long narrows; and 6 miles higher up, i. e. 261 miles above the mouth of the river, it is interrupted by falls of 20 feet perpendicular; above the falls the navigation continues good to the junction of Lewis's river. The portages around these obstructions of the navigation amount in all to 5 miles.

The entrance of the Columbia lies between breakers which extend from Cape Disappointment to a point on the southern shore, over a sort of bar or extensive flat. The entrance into the river and the egress out of it, are difficult at all seasons, and from October to April extremely dangerous; and in the opinion of experienced navigators, it cannot at any season be entered by loaded vessels of 400 tons. The westerly wind prevails on this coast, and the sea breaks on the bar with great violence. The first modern navigator that entered this river, was Mr. Gray, commander of the ship Columbia of Boston. He entered it in 1791, and since that time the river has been known by the name of Columbia. It was before called the Origon and River of the West.

The country bordering on the Columbia towards the ocean, is covered with heavy timber, consisting almost wholly of fir, of which Capts. Lewis and Clark mention 7 species, some growing to a great height. The soil is fertile, composed of a dark rich loam. The length of the valley from north to south, has never been ascertained. The climate is much milder than in the same parallel on the Atlantic coast.

Columbo, t. Ceylon; 70 SW. Candy. Lon. 79. 47. E. Lat. 6. 58. N. Pop. estimated at upwards of 50,000. It is the capital of the island, the seat of government, situated on the SW. part. The plan of the city is regular, nearly divided into 4 quarters by two principal streets, and the town is built more in the European style than most garrisons in India, though but few of the houses have more than one story. It is a place of considerable trade; but the harbour is difficult of access, and unsafe for large vessels. Scarcely any place in the world displays a greater variety of nations, manners, and religions.

Columbus, p-t. Franklin co. Ohio, and the capital of the state; 42 N. Chillicothe, 60 W. Zanesville, 104 NW. Marietta, 109 NE. Cincinnati, W. 418. Lon. 83. 3. W. Lat. 39. 47. N. It is situated on E. bank of the Scioto, on a pleasant site of rising ground, just below the confluence of the Whetstone, with the Scioto, and is within 20 miles of the centre of the state. It was laid out in 1812, and contained, in 1817, about 200 houses, and 1,400 inhabitants. It contains a state house, a building for the public offices, a penitentiary, a market house, a bank, and 2 printing offices, from each of which a newspaper is published.

In the centre of the town there is a public square containing 10 acres. On W. side of this area are erected the state house, and building for the public offices, both of brick, the former 75 feet by 50, and the latter 120 by 25.

It is situated in a beautiful plain, on all sides surrounded with agreeable hills, between the Sar and Sarella, which unite about half a league below. Abp. see. In the metropolitan church are preserved, as they believe, the remains of St. James, the patron of Spain, to whom the church is dedicated, and from whom the town is named; there are 12 parish churches, 14 religious houses, and 4 hospitals. The annual revenue of the archbishop is said to amount to 60,000 ducats: a university was established here in the year 1532, consisting of 4 colleges.—The order of St. Jago takes its title from this city, the knights of which possess 87 commanderies, with an annual income of 200,000 ducats.

Conception, (La,) or Penco, city & s-p. Chili, on the coast of the S. Pacific ocean, cap. of a jurisdiction; formerly the capital of Chili. Lon. 73. 55. W. Lat. 36. 49. S. Pop. 13,000. The bay of Conception is one of the most commodious harbours found in any part of the world. The city is of great extent, because the houses are built only one story high, that they may be the better able to resist the earthquakes that happen every year. It is the residence of the bishop, and of the major-general, who is at the head of the military department.—There is not in the universe a soil more fertile, than that of this part of Chili. Grain yields sixty for one; the vineyards are equally productive; and the plains are covered with innumerable flocks, which multiply beyond conception, though abandoned entirely to themselves. All the inhabitants have to do is to set up fences round their respective possessions, and to leave the oxen, horses, mules, and sheep in the enclosures. The common price of a fat ox is \$8; that of a sheep $\frac{3}{4}$ of a dollar; but there are few purchasers, and the natives are accustomed every year to kill a great number of oxen, of which the hides and tallow are alone preserved, and sent to Lima. There is no particular disease incident to this country. There are at Conception several persons, who have completed a century.

Pop. in 1810, 2,391 ; in 1820, 2,838. This town is the seat of the state government. The principal village is pleasantly situated on W. side of the river, chiefly built on one street, nearly 2 miles long. It contains a state house, a state prison, both of stone, a court house, a Congregational meeting house, 2 banks, 3 printing offices, and about 200 dwelling houses. The state house, erected in 1817, is a large and very elegant edifice, and cost $60,232. Three weekly newspapers are published in this town.

Much of the trade of the upper country centres here ; and the importance of the town is increased by the boat navigation, which is opened between this place and Boston, by means of the Merrimack river, and Middlesex canal. There are 2 bridges in Concord across the Merrimack ; one in the north part, the other connecting the town with Pembroke. In NE. part of the township, there is a village of about 30 houses.

Congo, or Kongo, km. Africa, bounded N. by Loango and Anziko, from which it is separated by the river Zaire or Congo, S. by Angola, and W. by the Atlantic. It extends several hundred miles into the interior, but the eastern limits are uncertain, and are said to be composed of lofty and rugged mountains. The climate is hot in summer, the winters are mild as the finest springs of Italy. Snow never falls, unless upon the highest mountains; ice is unknown; the days and nights are nearly equal. In the winter very heavy rains sometimes fall, so as to inundate the country. The soil is good, and generally produces two crops in a year. This country was first discovered by the Portuguese in 1487, who sent missionaries and established forts and factories. They represented the country as very populous; but captain Tuckey and his companions in their late expedition up the Zaire, saw no evidence of the great population which the Portuguese had described. The largest towns on the Zaire were Coolo, with 100 huts, Embomma with 60, and Inga with 70 huts. The natives are described as good humoured, lively, and hospitable. They practise polygamy, have a rude kind of agriculture, and their huts and household furniture are very simple. The country produces maize, cassava, sweet potatoes, pulse, cabbages, spinash, pepper, capsicum, sugar-cane, tobacco, banana, oranges, limes, pine-apples, and papaw. It abounds in wild animals. The principal town of the Portuguese is St. Salvador. The principal rivers are the Zaire, or Congo, Dando, Coanza, Vambra, and Barbela. Lon. 14. to 21. E. Lat. 3. to 8. 30. S.

Towns. Hartford and New Haven are the seats of the state government. The legislature meets at Hartford in the spring, and at New Haven in the autumn. There are 5 incorporated cities, Hartford, New Haven, Middletown, New London, and Norwich; and 3 boroughs, Bridgeport, Stonington and Guilford. Litchfield, Fairfield, Danbury, Windham, Wethersfield, Farmington, Windsor, East Windsor, Suffield, Enfield, Haddam, Derby, Stratford, Milford, Stamford, and several others, are considerable and pleasant towns.

Education. There is a college at New Haven, and there are 6 incorporated and 26 unincorporated academies. Those at Cheshire and Colchester are the principal. There is an asylum for the education of the deaf and dumb, at Hartford, and a school for the education of heathen youth at Cornwall. Good schools are common throughout the state. The state has a fund, which in 1821, amounted to $1,858,094, the interest of which is appropriated to the support of schools. In no part of the world are the common and useful branches of education more generally understood. The inhabitants are distinguished for their habits of industry and sobriety.

Government. The present constitution was framed in 1818. The legislature, styled the general assembly, is composed of a senate of 12 members, and a house of representatives; 80 towns sending each 2 representatives, the other towns, founded since the charter of Charles II, in 1662, send 1 each. The governor, lieutenant governor, senators, and representatives are all chosen annually in April. The general assembly has one stated session, in each year, on the 1st Wednesday in May, alternately at Hartford and New Haven. Judges of the supreme and superior courts hold their offices during good behaviour, but become disqualified at the age of 70.—No person is compelled to join, or support, or to be classed with, or associated to any congregation, church, or religious association. But every person may be compelled to pay his proportion of the expenses of the society to which he may belong, but he may separate himself from the society by leaving a written notice of his wish with the clerk of such society.

Religion. The number of religious societies of the several denominations, in 1819, was as follows; Congregationalists 210, Baptists 89, Episcopalians 74, Methodists 53, Separatists 7, Quakers 7, Universalists 2, Sandemanians 2, Shakers 1.

Rivers. The principal rivers are the Connecticut, Housatonic, Thames, Farmington, and Naugatuck.—The principal harbours are those of New London and New Haven.

Face of the country. The face of the country is greatly diversified by mountains, hills, and valleys. There are but few level tracts, nor any considerable mountains. The greatest elevation is a range of small mountains on the west side of Connecticut river, being a continuation of the Green mountains. The hills are generally of moderate size, and occur in quick succession, presenting to the traveller an ever varying prospect.

Soil. The soil is generally rich and fertile, though intermixed with portions that are comparatively thin and barren; and the whole is well watered. It is generally in a state of good cultivation, resembling, in many parts, a well cultivated garden.

Productions. The principal productions are Indian corn, rye, wheat in many parts, oats, barley, buck wheat, flax in large quantities, some hemp, potatoes, pumpkins, turnips, pease, beans, &c. Orchards are very numerous, and cider is made for exportation. The state is, however, generally better adapted to grazing than to tillage; and its fine meadows and pastures enable the farmers to feed great numbers of neat cattle, horses, and sheep. The quantity of butter and cheese made annually, is great, and of well known excellence. Beef and pork of superior quality, are also abundant. The state is generally laid out in small farms, from 50 to 300 and 400 acres. It is intersected by numerous roads, which are generally kept in a good state of repair.

Climate. Though exposed to the extremes of heat and cold, and to sudden changes of temperature, the country is very healthful. The northwest winds, which prevail during the winter, are keen, but the serenity of the sky during the same season, makes amends, in some degree, for the severity of the weather. In the maritime towns, the weather is particularly variable, changing as the wind blows from sea or land; in the inland country it is less so.

Commerce. The foreign trade of this state is principally with the West Indies; but its coasting trade is the most considerable. Its exports consist of beef, pork, cattle, horses, mules, butter, cheese, maize, rye, flax-seed, fish, candles, and soap. The whole amount, in 1816, was 593,806 dollars. Almost all the produce of the western part of the state is carried to N. York.

Manufactures. The manufacturing industry of Connecticut is greater in proportion to the population than that of any other state in the Union, except Rhode Island. The manufactures consist of cotton and woollen goods, tin ware, iron, gin, glass, paper, snuff, powder, leather, shoes, clocks, buttons, fire arms, carriages, &c.

Minerals. Mines of different kinds have been found in this state, but in general they have not been wrought to any considerable extent, with the exception of iron ore, which abounds in Salisbury and Kent, of an excellent quality, and is also found in other places. There is a lead mine on the Connecticut, 2 miles from Middletown, which was wrought during the revolutionary war. Copper mines have been discovered and opened in several places, but having proved unprofitable, they have been neglected. Marble is found in Washington, Milford, Brookfield, and New Milford; porcelain clay in New Milford and Cornwall; black lead in New Milford and Marlborough; cobalt in Chatham; and excellent free stone in Chatham, Haddam, and East Hartford. There are several mineral springs, but none of much note, except those of Stafford and Suffield. The one at Stafford is the most celebrated in New England.

Connecticut, the great river of New England. It has its source on the N. border of N. H., and separates N. Hampshire from Vermont, passes through Massachusetts and Connecticut, and flows into Long Island sound between Saybrook and Lime. Its general course is S. by W. till it reaches Middletown, Ct.; after which it has a SSE. course to its mouth. Its whole length is 410 miles. It is navigable for vessels drawing 10 feet of water to Middletown, 36 miles, for those drawing 8 feet to Hartford, 50 miles; and by means of locks and canals, it has been rendered navigable to the Fifteen Mile Falls, Bath, N. H., 250 miles above Hartford. The boats which navigate the river carry from 12 to 20 tons in descending, and about two thirds as much in returning.

The falls on this river which have been remedied by artificial means, are at Enfield, Ct.

the Willemantic falls, at South Hadley, Montague, Walpole, Plainfield, and Lebanon. Of these, Bellows falls, at Walpole, are the most remarkable. The perpendicular fall in the river which has been overcome, by means of locks and dams, between Springfield, Mass., and Hanover, N. H., a distance of 130 miles, is 200 feet.

The Connecticut flows through a fine country. The land bordering upon it is generally of an excellent quality, and there are upon its banks many beautiful and flourishing towns; among which are Haverhill, Hanover, Charlestown, and Walpole, N. H.; Newbury, Windsor, and Brattleborough, Vt.; Greenfield, Hadley, Northampton, and Springfield, Mass.; Hartford, and Middletown, &c. Ct.

Connecticut, lake, in N. part of N. H. It is the source of the principal branch of the river Connecticut; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles long, and $2\frac{1}{2}$ broad. Lat. 45. 2. N.

Connecticut Reserve, or New Connecticut, the northeast part of the state of Ohio. The extent is 120 miles from E. to W., and 52 from N. to S. It contains 4,000,000 acres; comprises 7 counties, Ashtabula, Trumbull, Portage, Geauga, Cuyahoga, Medina, and Huron; and is settled principally by emigrants, from the states of Massachusetts and Connecticut.

Connellsville, bor. Fayette co. on N. side of the Youghiogany; 267 W. Philadelphia, W. 200. Pop. 600. It has a pleasant and elevated situation, and commands a handsome prospect. In the neighbourhood of the town there are several merchant mills, furnaces, forges, and many other mills. The river is navigable to this town.

Constance, or Konstanz, city, Baden, situated on a lake called Boden sea, or the lake of Constance, and capital of the See-kreis, or Circle of the Lake; 30 ENE. Zurich. Lon. 9. 8. E. Lat. 47. 36. N. Pop. 4,503. Bp. see. It contains a cathedral, 4 parish churches, and a lyceum. It is very ancient, and was formerly imperial. From the year 1414 to 1418, was held here a famous council, which condemned the tenets of Wicliffe, and sentenced John Huss and Jerome of Prague to be burned.—Native, Tasius.

Constance, or Boden Sea, (an. Brigantinus), lake, situated between Ger. and Switz., about 40 miles in length, and where broadest about 12 across, of an oval form; the river Rhine passes through it. The fishery, though not so productive as formerly, is still considerable, and the trouts of the lake are famous throughout Germany.—Its banks are fertile, and lined with pleasant towns and villages. The NW. side of the lake is divided into two parts by a broad slip of land; these divisions are called the lakes of Zell and Uberlingen, from the two towns of Radolphzell, or Zell, and Uberlingen. The Rhine passes only through the lake of Zell.

Constantia, v. Africa, near the Cape of Good Hope, between Table bay and False bay; celebrated for its wine, produced from vines, said to be originally brought from Schiras, in Persia. Lon. 18. 30. E. Lat. 34. 0. S.

Constantina, t. Spain, in Andalusia; 42 NNE. Seville, 50 SW. Cordova.

Constantina, or Costhina, (an. Cirta), t. Africa, and capital of E. district of Algiers, on the Rummel; 160 E. Algiers, 180 W. Tunis. Lon. 6. 24. E. Lat. 36. 25. N. Pop. according to Hassel 100,000. It was anciently one of the strongest towns of Numidia; and it is now a strong town, situated upon a high rock. Here are to be seen many ruins of the ancient city; among which are 20 cisterns and the greatest part of a triumphal arch.

The province of Constantina extends on the coast of the Mediterranean from the river Booberak to the river Zaine, which separates it from Tunis. The province of Titterie bounds it on W., and the Sahara on S.; about 220 miles being its mean extent from E. to W., and 110 from N. to S. Both the N. and S. parts are mountainous, and in some parts rocky, but it is generally fertile, and pays a greater revenue to the state than the other two. It forms a part of the ancient Mauritania Cæsariensis and Numidia.

Constantinople, city, Eu. Turkey, capital of the Turkish empire, on the west side of the Thracian Bosphorus or strait of Constantinople, and on the north side of the sea of Marmora; 1,500 ESE. Paris. Lon. 28. 55. E. Lat. 41. 1. N. Pop. variously estimated; by Eaton at less than 300,000; Dalaway 400,000; Eden 426,000; Olivier 500,000; Turner, in 1815, 600, or 700,000; Hebesci 1,500,000. Hassel states it at 500,000; 250,000 Turks, 150,000 Greeks, 40,000 Franks, 30,000 Armenians, and 30,000 Jews. According to Luchereau in 1819, by calculation from the daily consumption of corn, the population was computed at about 900,000; and calculations from the annual mortality made it nearly the same; 630,000 Turks, 120,000 Greeks, 70,000 Armenians, 50,000 Jews, 2,000 Franks. Houses, according to Hassel, upwards of 80,000; Luchereau about 100,000.

It was called by the ancients Byzantium; the eastern nations call it Constantiniah; the Turks Istamboul, or Stamboul. It was built anew by Constantine, who transferred the seat of the empire from Rome to this city in 328, and from him it was named Constantinople. It continued the seat of the eastern empire till 1453, when it was taken by the Turks, and from that time it has been the metropolis of their dominions. The harbour is one of the best in the world, both for security and convenience. It lies on the north side of the city, has an easy approach both from the Black sea and the Archipelago, and is capable of receiving above 1,200 ships. From the curve it describes, and from the rich cargoes that were wafted thither, it obtained, at a remote period, the name of Golden Horn, which it still retains. Of the ships in the harbour very few are Turkish; they are French, Italian, British, Dutch, &c., exchanging the produce of their respective countries for that of Turkey, Poland, and Russia. The imports consist of tin, cotton goods, groceries, glass, furniture, and other manufactures; exports gold, money, diamonds, &c. The principal manufacture exported is a kind of silk stuff, interwoven with cotton. Nearly 10,000 looms are employed by Armenians in this manufacture. The city stands chiefly on a slope, presenting a delightful prospect to the approaching spectator. The 7 eminences on which it is built seem, at a distance, to rise above each other in beautiful succession; and the prospect is terminated by a fine green hill in the back ground. Its form exclusive of the suburbs resembles an unequal triangle, having the longest side on the west. It is enclosed on the three sides by walls, the most remarkable being the ancient wall of Theodosius on the west or land side, 5 miles in length. The greater part of the suburbs are entirely open. The interior presents a striking contrast to the exterior beauty of the city; the streets being in general narrow, gloomy, slanting, and dirty; the private houses low, and built of slight wood work or earth. It contains 14 imperial mosques, 200 common ones, 300 messgids, 500 fountains, 23 Greek churches, 9 Catholic, 3 Armenian; also a Russian, and a Swedish Lutheran church; 35 public libraries, in some of which are 15,000 volumes. The small mosques and messgids are distinguished from the private houses only by their minarets. The large mosques are ornamented with columns taken from the ruined temples of Greece. The oldest and most remarkable mosque is that of St. Sophia, originally built for a church by Constantine, and rebuilt by Justinian. It is 269 feet long, and 243 broad, and has 4 minarets.

The seraglio with its gardens, occupies one of the 7 hills; the one on which ancient Byzantium was built. It consists of a vast assemblage of buildings inhabited by the sultan and his court and the officers of government. The part occupied by the women is called the harem. The seraglio like the city appears much finer at a distance, than on a near approach. The entrance of the first court is very wide, and lofty, and is called Baba-hoomajin, or Sublime Porte. At a distance of about 1,000 paces from the outer gate, is the entrance of the second, called the Baba-Salem, or gate of Health. The gate of the third court, called the Baba-Saadi, or gate Happiness, opens into the apartments of the women. Into this court none but Mahometans attached to the palace, are permitted to enter. In these abodes of magnificence and misery, are immured upwards of 500 unfortunate females devoted to the pleasure of a single master.—Among the antiquities of Constantinople the Hippodrome or ancient circus of the Greeks, called by the Turks Atmeidan, is remarkable. The area is about 250 paces in length, and 150 in breadth, and is constantly occupied by public games and exhibitions.

The suburb of Galata stands opposite to the seraglio on the north side of the harbour, and is inhabited only by merchants and seafaring people. To the westward is the suburb of Tophana, so called from the cannon foundery. On the heights above this suburb stands Pera, inhabited chiefly by individuals in the suites of European ambassadors to the Porte. On an adjacent hill stands the suburb of St. Demetri, inhabited by Greeks. Scutari, though situated on the eastern or Asiatic side of the Bosphorus, is also accounted a suburb. The castle of the seven towers is a state prison near the sea of Marmora. The name Porte is said to be taken from Porta Aurea, one of the gates of the city towards the sea of Marmora.—The plague commonly visits Constantinople every year and makes great ravages. Though the climate is not healthy, yet the prevalence of the plague is said not to be occasioned so much by any thing in the locality of the city, as by the obstinate carelessness of the Turks.

Constantinow, or Stano Constantinow, t. Russia, in Vohynia, on the river Slucza; 8. NNW. Braclaw, 96 SE. Lucko. Lon. 27. 20. E. Lat. 49. 40. N. Pop. 4,032.

It is built on a low tract, surrounded with small lakes, and partly intersected by inlets of the sea, yet it is accounted healthy. It consists of the old and new town, and Christianshaven; of an oblong form, surrounded with walls, about 5 miles in circuit. It is fortified towards the land side with regular ramparts and bastions, and is environed with a wet ditch, which is both broad and deep. Many of the streets are broad and well paved, having side-walks; others are very narrow and inconvenient. The houses are mostly modern, built of brick and stuccoed; some are of white calcareous stone; the finer edifices of free-stone or Norwegian marble. It is one of the best built cities in the north of Europe, and on approaching it from the sea it presents a magnificent view; the avenues on the land side are likewise very beautiful.

The harbour is very excellent, formed by a narrow arm of the sea, or channel, running between the city and the opposite island of Amack. It is of sufficient depth to admit the largest ships, and capable of containing 500 merchantment, though the entrance is so narrow, that only one can enter at a time. About 400 vessels belong to the port, manned by nearly 6,000 seamen. Its foreign commerce, which has been subject to great variation, has been carried on chiefly with the ports of the Baltic, with Germany, France, Portugal, Italy, and the West Indies. The manufactures consist of linen, sail-cloth, ticking, cotton stuffs, woollens, leather, spirituous liquors, and porcelain. Here are anchor founderies, roperies, and extensive dockyards.

Copenhagen is not only the residence of the court, but the seat of all the great public establishments of the kingdom. It contains a cathedral, 20 churches, 3 synagogues, 22 hospitals, 4 royal palaces, 3 gymnasia, several learned societies, public libraries, and other establishments. The small Gothic castle of Rosenburg is a royal palace, remarkable for its museum, which contains the regalia, with valuable collections of minerals and medals. The gardens are very extensive, and form the principal promenade of the citizens. The observatory is 130 feet high, and about 70 in diameter, and is remarkable for a spiral carriage road, made of brick, on a very easy ascent. The university, founded in 1479, consists of 4 faculties, and has 20 ordinary, and 16 extraordinary professors, a library of about 60,000 volumes, an anatomical theatre, museum of natural history, one of the best botanic gardens in Europe, containing about 7,500 plants, and usually 600 or 700 students, of whom 168 are maintained from the public funds. The royal library contains upwards of 260,000 printed volumes, and 30,000 MSS.—In 1728, two thirds of the town were destroyed by fire. In 1794, nearly 1,000 houses were burnt; another great fire happened in 1795. In 1807, it was bombarded by the British, and above 300 houses, including the cathedral and a part of the university, were destroyed, and twice that number damaged.

Cordova, pr. Spain, and once an independent kingdom, a part of Andalusia, bounded N. by Estramadua and La Mancha, E. by Jaen and Grenada, S. by Seville, and W. by Seville and Estramadura. The country is partly covered with the mountains of Morena and with vast plains, with sharp, naked rocks, and deep valleys between. Fruits are abundant, as grapes, olives, figs, citrons, &c. Myrtles, lentisks, pines, wild olives, &c. grow without care. Game is abundant, with a great number of sheep and goats. The principal towns are Cordova, Lucena, and Montilla. Pop. in 1797, 252,028. Sq. m. 4,583.

Cordova, (an. Corduba, & Colonia Patricia), ancient and rich city, Spain, on the Guadalquivir, about a league from the Morena mountains; 75 NE. Seville. Lon. 4. 46. W. Lat. 37. 52. N. Pop. 35,000. H. 3,300. Bp. see. It contains a cathedral, 16 churches, 40 convents, 16 hospitals, and 2 colleges. The cathedral, originally a mosque, built about the year 692, is a magnificent monument, 534 feet by 387. It was a town of consideration under the Romans; the two Senecas, and the poet Lucan, were born here. The bridge was built by the Moors, and is supported by 16 arches. It is said to have contained in the time of the Moors a population of 300,000. The ancient palace of the Moorish kings is large and beautiful, but has been converted into stables, in which 100 Andalusian horses are usually kept.—In the first ages after its foundation, this city possessed a university, in which all the sciences were cultivated. Gallio, the orator, and many other eminent men, studied here. This university flourished also under the Moors. Cordova is remarkable for a kind of leather called from this town, Cordovan, or Cordwain.—Natives, the two Senecas, Lucan, Averroes, Gonzalves, and Ferdinand de Cordova.

Cordova, pr. S. A., in Buenos Ayres, about 100 leagues in length, and 70 in breadth, crossed by several chains of mountains, and watered by several rivers. The principal town is called by the same name, besides which there are some towns and villages. The inhabitants feed a great number of cattle and horses, which form their principal trade. Serpents are numerous; some of them are of an amazing size, and exceedingly dangerous, others are harmless. This province is but little known.

Cordova, t. S. A., and capital of the province of Tucuman, in Buenos Ayres, founded in 1550, by Nugnez Prado, and about 20 years after erected into a bishopric; 450 by the common road NNW. Buenos Ayres. Lon. 65. 10. W. Lat. 31. 20. S. Pop. according to Mr. Bland, about 10,000. It contains about 1,500 Spanish inhabitants, with about 4,000 negroes. It has a handsome cathedral, and a spacious market place. The college formerly belonging to the Jesuits, is a large edifice, now appropriated to public purposes. The adjacent country is fruitful, abounding in excellent pasture.

Corea, km. Asia, bounded N. by Chinese Tartary, E. by the sea of Japan, S. by a narrow sea, which parts it from the Japanese islands, and W. by the Yellow sea, which parts it from China; about 500 m. from N. to S., and 150 from E. to W. It is a peninsula, being every where surrounded with the sea, except towards the N. This country consists of 8 provinces, in which are found 40 grand cities, called kiun; 33 of the first rank, called fou; 58 tcheous, or cities of the second rank; and 70 of the third, called hien; besides a great number of fortresses, well garrisoned.—The N. part of Corea is barren, woody, and mountainous; infested with wild beasts, and but thinly inhabited, but the southern division is rich and fertile, breeds great numbers of large and small cattle, besides fowl, wild and tame, and a great variety of game; it likewise produces silk, flax, and cotton.—The king of Corea pays an annual tribute to China, but in the interior administration is independent. The prevailing religion is that of Fo or Buddha. Pop. vaguely estimated at 6, or 8,000,000. Sq. m. about 88,000. King-ki-tao is the capital.

The air is healthy, the land fertile, and the fruit excellent. Oranges, citrons, the most delicious grapes, honey, wax, and oil, are exceedingly abundant. Some parts are mountainous and barren, and good water is scarce. Salt forms a great part of its riches. The capital has always borne the name of the island. —This island was taken by the French, and given to them by the treaty of Campo Formio. In March 1799, it was taken from them by the Russians and Turks, and united with Cephalonia, Zante, &c. to form a republic, under the denomination of the Seven Islands.

Corfu, (an. Corcyra,) capital of the island of the same name. Lon. 21. 1. E. Lat. 39. 38. N. Pop. 15,000. Abp. see. It is the seat of government of the Ionian islands. It is fortified, and defended by 2 fortresses; it has a good harbour, and considerable trade. In 1818, a university was established here, under the auspices of the British government, by the earl of Guilford, who was appointed chancellor, and nominated Greeks to the different chairs, of the first abilities. The number of students soon amounted to 150.

Corinth, or Corinto, or Corito, or Coranto, or Kordos, t. Greece, in the Morea; 46 WNW. Athens, 340 SW. Constantinople. Lon. 23. 28. E. Lat. 37. 56. N. Pop. stated from 2, to 5,000. Greek abp. see. Corinth now presents more the appearance of a village, than a town. The walls are about 2 miles in circuit. The houses, which are tolerably large and well built, are scattered in groups, and separated by gardens and cornfields. It is situated near a narrow isthmus, to which it gives name, and which joins the Morea to the rest of Greece; between the gulf of Lepanto, (anciently the Gulf of Corinth,) and the gulf of Engia, (anciently the Saronic Gulf,) It had anciently two harbours, Cenchrea, on the Saronic gulf, and Lecheum, on the gulf of Corinth. The latter now forms the port. It was formerly a powerful city, till it was totally destroyed and burnt by Mummius, the Roman consul, B. C. 146. The riches found in the city were immense, and the metals melted and mixed together by the fire, formed what was called Corinthian brass.—The temple of Venus possessed above 1,000 female slaves, as courtezans.

Traces of the ancient walls are still discernible, and the remains of a temple; but the most interesting monument of antiquity is the citadel, or Acro Corinthos, situated on a ridge, a little above the town, and still fortified. Above the bazar or market, are eleven columns, supporting their architraves, of the Doric order, fluted, and wanting in height near half the common proportion to the diameter. Within them, towards the west end, is one taller, not entire, which it is likely contributed to support the roof; they are of stone, not marble.

Cork, county, Ireland, formerly a kingdom, bounded N. by the county of Limerick, E. by the counties of Tipperary and Waterford, on SSE. and SW. by the sea, and W. by the county of Kerry; 99 English miles in length, and 71 in breadth. The land is generally good. The principal towns are Cork, Kinsale, Youghal, Mallow, Donneraile, and Bandon-bridge. Pop. stated in 1813, at 523,936; by census, in 1821, 702,000.

Cork, city, Ireland, capital of the county of Cork; 126 SW. Dublin. Lon. 8. 28. W. Lat. 51. 54. N. Pop. in 1814, 64,394. H. 8,600. Bp. see, united with Ross. It was originally built on an island, formed by the river Lee, but is now greatly extended on the opposite banks of both branches of the river. It is 15 miles from the sea, and its harbour, or cove, 9 miles below the town, is celebrated for its safety and capaciousness. Its entrance, deep and narrow, is defended by a strong fort on each side. Cork is the second city in Ireland, and exports great quantities of salt provisions; and during the slaughtering season, 100,000 head of cattle are prepared. The other exports are butter, candles, soap, whiskey, hides, pork, rabbit-skins, linen, woollens, yarn, &c. Its manufactures are sail-cloth, sheeting, paper, leather, glue, glass, coarse cloth, &c.

The approaches to the town were formerly 2 large stone bridges; to which 3 others have been added. The public buildings are generally of a plain exterior. The principal ones are a stately cathedral, exchange, market house, custom house, town house, 2 theatres, several hospitals and churches, large barracks, &c. The Cork Institution is an incorporated scientific establishment, in which lectures are delivered on chemistry, agriculture, and botany. The houses of the city are generally old and not elegant.—It sends two members to parliament.

Corsica, called Kyrnon, Kyrnos, or Cyrnos by the Greeks, and Corsica by the Romans, isl. in the Mediterranean, between the territory of Genoa and the island of Sardinia; belonging to France; about 110 miles in length, and of unequal breadth. Sq. m. 3,880. Pop. 174,702. It was for a time formed into 2 departments, Golo and Liamone, which in 1811, were united into 1. Ajaccio is the capital. The other principal towns are Bastia, Porto Vecchio, and Caliri.

Corsica is covered with mountains. The principal chain divides the island into 2 unequal parts; the summits (the 2 highest are Monte Rotondo 9,900, and Monte d'Oro 8,720 feet high) are covered with snow the most of the year. It is watered by a multitude of streams and rivulets. The most noted lakes are Creno, Ino, and Stagno di Diana. The cold in winter is intense; the heat of summer is moderated by sea breezes; putrid exhalations in low grounds often give rise to fevers. The soil, though stony, and but little cultivated, is productive in corn, wine, oranges, lemons, figs, &c., but the chief wealth consists in oil, chestnuts, and timber. The fisheries are valuable.

Cosacs, or Cossacs, or Cosaques, or Kosaks, a military nation inhabiting the frontiers of the Russian empire. There are several divisions of them, but the Don Cosacs, who inhabit on the Don and its branches, are regarded as the principal stock. The country of the Don Cosacs is bounded by the Russian governments Saratov, Caucasus, Voronetz, Charkov, and Ekaterinoslav. Pop. 355,261. Sq. m. 81,740. Tcherkask is the chief town. The country is in many parts very fertile. It is divided into 112 stanitzas, or cantons; of which 62 are on the Don, 9 on the Donetz, 20 on the Choper, 11 on the Medveditza, and 10 on the Bouzoulook. The Don Cosacs are of the Greek religion, and are in subordination to the Russian government, yet possess a constitution of their own, which is at once military and democratic. They are hospitable, brave, and of very martial appearance. They neglect agriculture, and derive their support from the breeding of cattle, fishing, and trade. They are trained up for soldiers, and can at any time furnish 50,000 cavalry completely equipped. Their chief is styled Hetman, i. e. Headman.

The Malo-Russian Cosacs, inhabit between the Dnieper, and the Dneister. They are of later origin than the Don Cosacs, and are numerous.

Tchernomorski, or Cosacs of the Black sea, are a branch of the Malo-Russian Cosacs. They inhabit a territory of about 1,000 square miles, and their number is stated at 39,395. They are much less civilized than the Don Cosacs.

The Cosacs of Volga have 1,000 men registered for service, and the Grebenskoï Cosacs have 1,200.

The Orenburg Cosacs inhabit along the Samara and the Upper part of the Ural, and can raise 20,000 men.

The Cosacs of the Ural, or Jaik, are supposed to have 30,000 men fit to bear arms.

The Siberian Cosacs are estimated at 100,000.—The whole number of Cosac male population, in the Russian dominions, is estimated at 500,000; of these about 200,000 are liable to be called upon for government service.

Cotopaxi, an enormous volcanic mountain of the Andes, in Quito; 35 SSE. Quito, NNE. Chimborazo. Lat. about 0. 40. S. The form is the most beautiful of the colossal summits of the Andes. It is a perfect cone, which, being covered with an enormous layer of snow, shines with the most dazzling splendour at the setting of the sun, and detaches itself in the most picturesque manner from the azure vault of heaven. The crater is surrounded by a small circular wall, which, when viewed through a telescope, appears like a parapet.

Cotopaxi is the loftiest of those volcanoes of the Andes, which have been recently liable to eruption. Its height above the sea is 18,898 feet. It is the most tremendous volcano in Quito, and its explosions have been most disastrous, spreading destruction over the surrounding plains. Remarkable eruptions took place in 1698, 1738, 1742, 1744, 1766, and 1768; and one in 1803. In 1698, the eruption destroyed the city of Tacunga with 3/4ths of its inhabitants, and other settlements. In 1738, the flames rose nearly 3,000 feet above the brink of the crater; and in 1744, its roarings were heard as far as Honda, on the Magdalena, 600 miles distant.—Humboldt found it difficult to ascend the mountain, in 1802, as far as to the limit of perpetual snow, and he pronounces it impossible by any human art to reach the summit. According to Humboldt, the great mountains of the Andes are composed chiefly of porphyry.

Another statement is as follows : slaves, 225,286 ; free coloured people, 115,691 ; total of the population, 620,980. It forms a captain-generalship, and is divided into 2 governments, that of Cuba or St. Jago de Cuba, and the Havannah ; and is subdivided into jurisdictions and districts. The principal towns are the Havannah, St. Jago de Cuba, Villa del Principe, Bayamo, and Matanzas.

A chain of mountains extends the whole length of the island from east to west, dividing it into 2 parts. From these 158 rivers pour down into the plains ; and at the foot of the mountains the country opens into extensive meadows, which afford pasture to numerous herds of cattle both wild and tame. The temperature is warm and dry, milder than that of St. Domingo. The months of July and August are rainy ; the rest of the year hot and dry. The rivers abound in fish, the forests in choice and large timber. The soil is of great fertility, so that the fields are always covered with flowers and odoriferous plants, and the trees with foliage ; and it produces, in abundance, ginger, long pepper, and other spices ; aloes, mastic, cassia, fistula, manioc, maize, cocoa, honey, &c. ; tobacco, accounted the best in America ; sugar and coffee in great quantities. The aggregate exports for 5 years, from 1815 to 1819, amounted to $81,224,808 09. It contains some very abundant mines of copper and loadstone ; also some iron, gold, rock crystals, and numerous medicinal springs.

Cupica, s-p. & bay, S. A., on SE. side of Panama, following the coast of the Pacific ocean, from Cape St. Miguel to Cape Corrientes. This is thought by Humboldt the most favourable point for connecting the Atlantic and Pacific oceans by a canal. From the bay of Cupica there is a passage of only 15 or 18 miles over a country quite level and suited to a canal, to the head of navigation of the river Naipi, a branch of the river Atrato, which flows into the Atlantic. Gogueneche, a Biscayan pilot, is said to have first pointed out this spot as almost the only place where the chain of the Andes is completely interrupted, and a canal thus made practicable.

It was consecrated to Venus, and represented by the poets as the birthplace of that goddess, and the abode of the Graces. It was much celebrated in ancient times for its ample population, (computed at upwards of 1,000,000,) its great fertility, its smiling aspect, and above all as the abode of gaiety and pleasure. Dr. Clarke thus describes its present impoverished state under the oppressive government of the Turks; "agriculture neglected, inhabitants oppressed, population destroyed, pestiferous air, contagion, poverty, indolence, desolation."

It is nearly traversed from east to west by two chains of mountains, very lofty, and covered with snow in the winter. In the level parts the summer heat is intense. The soil is naturally very fertile. The staple production is wine, very famous in the Levant, but unpleasant to English palates, on account of a sickly sweetness. Other productions are corn of excellent quality, cheese, wool, silk, and salt. The island was once famous for mines, the positions of which cannot now be recognised. The Cypriots, like their ancestors, are greatly addicted to pleasure. They are tall, well made, and have an agreeable air; the females still display that beauty of form and features for which they were so much celebrated in ancient times.—None of the Greek islands offers a richer harvest to the antiquary. Extensive collections of gems, medals, and intaglios may be easily made. The chief towns are Nicosia, Larnic, and Famagusta.

Dahomy, or Dauma, country, Africa, on the Slave coast, situated about 60 or 70 miles from the Atlantic; called also Fouin. Dahomy, as known at present, is supposed to reach from the sea coast about 150 or 200 miles inland, though no European has penetrated above half that distance; the capital, Abomey, lies in about 9 deg. and 50 min. N. Lat., and between the 3 and 4 deg. E. Lon. The soil is a deep rich clay, of a reddish colour, with a little sand on the surface, except about Calmina, where it is more light and gravelly; but there is not to be found a stone as big as an egg in the whole country, so far as it has been visited by the Europeans. Of farinacious vegetables the country yields a plentiful supply; viz. maize, millet, or Guinea-corn, of different sorts; a kind of peas, or rather kidney beans, called callavances; and also a species of beans called ground-beans.—Pine-apples, melons, oranges, limes, guavas, and other tropical fruits also abound in this fertile country.

The government is perhaps the most perfect despotism on the earth, and the religion is paganism. Within the walls of the different royal palaces in Dahomy, are immured not less than 3,000 women. Several hundreds of these are trained to arms under a female general, and subordinate officers, appointed by the king in the same manner as those under the agaow. The general character of the Dahomans is marked by a mixture of ferocity and politeness. Chief town, Abomey.

Dalmatia in its widest acceptation formerly comprehended a part of Bosnia, Herzegovina, a part of Albania, called Lower or Turkish Dalmatia, and the Littorale, or Hungarian Dalmatia, which now forms a part of the government of Trieste.

The surface of a great part of Dalmatia is hilly and unproductive, but there are many beautiful and fertile valleys. The natural scenery is very magnificent; the forests on the mountains are of great extent, and abound in ship timber. The rivers are short, but a number of them are navigable; the principal are Cettina, Cherka, and Narenta. The country is rich in iron mines, marble, and gypsum. The chief productions are maize, wheat, grapes, olives, other fruits, and silk, but agriculture is in a low state of improvement. The climate is temperate and salubrious in the interior, but unhealthy in many parts on the coast. The islands are numerous; the principal are Brazza, Lesina, Corzola, and Melada. No part of Europe abounds more in good harbours, but little use has been made of them. The inhabitants of the maritime towns are mostly Catholics, and speak Italian; those of the interior are chiefly of the Greek church, and are Morlachians and Haiducks, both, particularly the latter, in a low state of civilization. Dalmatia derives its name from its ancient capital Delminium or Delmium. It formed a part of ancient Illyrium, and the country still exhibits many remains of antiquity.

Damascus, pachalic, A. Turkey, comprehending the eastern part of Syria with the most of Palestine. It is considered the first pachalic in point of importance in the Turkish empire. It includes besides Damascus, the capital towns of Hamah, Jerusalem, Hebron, Nablous, Jaffa, Gaza, Ramla, &c. The surface is various, partly mountainous, and partly consisting of valleys interspersed with plains. Some districts are poor and sandy, others very fertile.

Damascus, called by the inhabitants Damesk, or Demesk, by the Arabs, Sham, or El Scham Sherif, city, Syria, capital of a pachalic of the same name; 60 E. Saide, 120 NNE. Jerusalem, 190 S. by E. Antioch, 276 SSW. Diarbekir. Lon. 36. 30. E. Lat. 38. 30. N. Pop. estimated by Browne and Ali Bey at 200,000; 20,000 Catholics, 5,000 Greeks, 1,000 Jewish families. Volney states it at only 80,000, Hassel at 100,000; the inhabitants as high as 400,000.

It is situated in an extensive and fertile plain, watered by the river Barrady, forming a circuit of 25 or 30 miles, formed into gardens and stored with fruit trees of every description. The city is about 2 miles long, surrounded by walls defended by towers, which are now fallen into a ruinous state. The streets are mostly narrow, but well paved, and have elevated foot paths on each side. The houses in the suburbs are built of earth or bricks baked in the sun, and are surmounted with cupolas. The houses in the interior are constructed of more substantial materials, usually 2 stories high, with flat roofs, but have few windows, and the city has a monotonous appearance. There are about 500 magnificent houses, entitled to the name of palaces; but their splendour is confined to the interior. The furniture of many is worth from £5,000 to £25,000, consisting of sofas, carpets, mirrors, &c. Damascus contains a great number of fountains, and the waters of the Barrady are distributed by numerous canals through the city, as well as among the gardens in the vicinity. There are more than 200 mosques, only one, called Zeia, deserving particular notice on account of its extent. The patriarch of Antioch usually resides here. There are 8 synagogues, 3 Franciscan monasteries, and a Greek, Maronite, Syrian, and an Armenian church. The castle is a fine rustic edifice, $\frac{3}{4}$ mile in circuit, and within it resembles a small town.

Damascus is the centre of the commerce of Syria; and its trade is rendered more considerable by its forming the rendezvous to all the pilgrims from the north of Asia to Mecca. Their number amounts annually to 30, or 40,000; and many arrive several months before the departure of the caravan. The city then presents the appearance of an immense fair, every place being filled with camels, horses, mules, and merchandize. Commerce is carried on chiefly by caravans, of which the principal is that which goes annually with the pilgrims to Mecca. This expedition is conducted with great pomp, and is partly of a commercial, and partly of a religious nature. Three caravans, each accompanied by above 2,500 armed men, go thrice a year to Bagdad; those to Aleppo travel twice or thrice a month; others go to Cairo and various other places. The manufactures are extensive, consisting of arms, silk and cotton stuffs, soap, leather, sweet meats, &c. The sabres formerly manufactured here were very celebrated, and had the quality of being perfectly elastic.

Damascus was anciently the capital of the kingdom of Syria; it is one of the most venerable cities in the world for its antiquity, and is known to have existed in the time of Abraham. It was taken and destroyed by Tamerlane in 1400; repaired by the Mamalukes; and wrested from them by the Turks in 1506, since which it has formed the capital of one of their pachalics.—Native, Ismael Abulfeda.

Pop. according to Binos 30,000; according to Savary 80,000. Damietta daily increased as Pelusium declined. It is the emporium of commerce between Egypt and Syria, situated on the Phatmetic branch of the Nile. The city is without walls, built in the form of the crescent, on the winding bank of the river, 6 miles from the sea. It is larger and not less agreeable than Rosetta, and has several squares. Bazars filled with merchandize, okals, or khans, under the porticos of which are Indian stuffs, silks from Mount Lebanon, sal ammoniac, and quantities of rice, bespeak it a commercial place. The houses, especially near the river, are very high; most of them have pleasant saloons built on the terraces, from which charming places, open to every wind; there is a view of the grand lake lying on the other side, and of the Nile, which traverses a rich country between them both. Various grand mosques, with high minarets, ornament the city. The public baths, faced with marble, are similar to those of Cairo. Multitudes of boats and small vessels incessantly fill the port of Damietta. Some, named Sherm, serve to load and unload the ships that anchor in the road; others are coasting pilot-boats. There is a great trade between this city and Syria, Cyprus, and Turkey.

Dantzic, city & s-p. West Prussia, capital of a government, on the west side of the Vistula, 5 miles above its entrance into the Baltic; 68 WSW. Königsberg, 230 NE. Berlin. Lon. 18. 38. E. Lat. 54. 21. N. Pop. in 1818, 58,623. H. 6,327. It is traversed by 2 small rivers, the Motlau and Radaune, which soon after join the Vistula. It consists properly of 3 towns, the Vorstadt or Foretown, the Altstadt or Old Town, and the Rechstadt. It is surrounded with ramparts, lined with brass cannon; but a more effectual defence consists in the power of laying the country on one side under water, and resisting assailants on the other from fortified heights. The harbour is formed by the mouth of the Vistula, and is defended by forts; it communicates by a canal with the Motlau, and the cargoes of vessels drawing more than 8 feet water are conveyed to the city in barks. The road or gulf of Dantzic is an arm of the sea sheltered from the north winds by a tongue of land, on which stands the town of Hela.

Dantzic has long been one of the principal granaries of Europe. The most important article of export is corn from Prussia and Poland, brought down the Vistula in small vessels; also, potash, hemp, flax, linen, timber, &c. The number of ships entered here, in 1802, was 1,674; cleared, 1,916; in 1815, an unfavorable year, entered only 459; cleared, 377. It is an ancient city, long noted for its commerce, and was a leading member of the Hanse towns. It contains an elegant cathedral, a town house, an arsenal, 21 churches, 12 Luth., 7 Cath., and 2 Ref.; an academy, a cabinet of natural history, 3 Latin schools, and a gymnasium with a library of 27,000 vols. The houses are built of brick or stone, commonly of 3 or 4 stories.—Natives, Hevel, Cluverius, and Archenholz. Pop. of the government, 258,400. Sq. m. 3,127. It is divided into the circles of Dirschau, Stargard, and Marienburg.

Danube, (an. Ister, & Danubius), r. Germany, which rises in the Black Forest, in Baden, having one head spring near Donaueschingen, and another near St. Georgen, and becomes navigable at Ulm; passes through Swabia, Bavaria, Austria, Hungary, Servia, Bulgaria, Walachia, and Moldavia; and empties itself into the Black sea, by several mouths, between Lat. 44. 55. and 45. 30. N.; 35 E. Ismail. It receives 60 rivers, great and small, in its course, among which are the Inn, Drave, Save, Teisse, and Pruth, and runs near to, or washes the walls of the following cities and towns:—Eschingen, Ulm, Donawert, Neuburg, Ingoldstadt, Straubing, Passau, Lintz, Ips, Stein, Tulln, Vienna, Presburg, Raab or Javarin, Comorn, Gran, Visegrad, Waitzen, Pest, Buda, Colocza, Baja, Illok, Peterwaradin, Belgrade, Semendria, Vipalanka, Orsova, Viddin, Nicopoli, Russig or Ruscek, Dristra, Kassovat, Kirsova, Ibrail, Reni, Rakel, Isakzi, Ismail, Tulcza, Kilia, &c. It is about 1,800 miles long; its breadth various; for a great way above its mouth, 2 or 3 miles wide. Though much larger than the Rhine, it is seldom to be compared with that river for the sublimity of its scenery, its shores being often low, and its channel filled with shoals and small islands. It abounds in fish, and is particularly noted for large sturgeon.—On account of the rapidity of its current and its emptying into a sea not much frequented, it serves but little the purposes of foreign commerce.

Danvers, t. Essex co. Mass.; 15 NE. Boston. Pop. in 1810, 3,127; in 1820, 3,646. It borders on Salem, on the NW., and its largest settlement is a continuation of the principal street of Salem. It consists of 2 parishes, in each of which is a large Congregational meeting house. Large quantities of leather, brick, and earthen ware are manufactured here. Most of the cattle, sheep, &c. for the supply of Salem market, come to this town. At the head of Beverly river, 2 miles from Salem, there is a pleasant village, containing a Baptist meeting house and a large iron manufactory. Considerable business has been done at this village at ship building.

Danville, t. Cumberland co. Maine. Pop. 1,085.

Danville, p-t. & cap. Caledonia co. Vt.; 28 ENE. Montpelier. 165 NNW. Boston, W. 535. Lon. 72. 2. W. Lat. 44. 26. N. Pop. 2,300. This is a pleasant and valuable agricultural town, and it has a small village containing a court house, a jail, a printing office, a Congregational meeting house, and it is a place of some trade.

Danville, p-t. Pittsylvania co. Va., on the river Dan, 130 miles by water, and 116 by land above the great falls of the Roanoke, about 70 S. by W. Lynchburg, 150 SW. by W. Richmond, W. 291. Lon. 79. 25. W. Lat. 36. 34. N. Pop. in 1818, about 500. It contained, in 1818, an academy, a printing office, 3 warehouses for the inspection of tobacco, a flour inspection, 3 saw mills, a manufacturing mill, and some others, most of them very recently erected. It is situated at the falls of the Dan, on a wide and beautiful plain, rising gradually from the river to a high eminence, which commands an extensive and picturesque prospect, embracing a view of the falls, the gentle current of the river below, and the verdant hills and cultivated fields of the surrounding country. The improvements projected a few years since in the navigation of the Dan above this place, and at the falls of the Roanoke, opening a direct water communication with Norfolk, gave a sudden start to the prosperity of Danville. The Roanoke Navigation Company have constructed a canal with locks around the falls, with a basin formed in the centre of the town, safe and convenient for the batteaux navigation of the river. Danville is becoming the upland depot of an extensive commerce, embracing not only the adjacent fertile districts of Virginia and North Carolina, but also a great part of East Tennessee. The articles of commerce consist of wheat, flour, tobacco, cotton, whiskey, brandy, Indian corn, beef, pork, butter, poultry, lumber, and iron. Batteaux carrying from 8 to 12 hogsheads of tobacco, and from 30 to 40 barrels of flour, have a convenient navigation from this place to the falls of the Roanoke.

Dardanelles, or Strait of Gallipoli, (an. Hellespont,) strait, between Asia and Europe, forming a communication between the Archipelago and the sea of Marmora. It resembles an immense river flowing majestically between two elevated and fertile hills. It is without rocks or shoals, and has in some parts a depth of 60 fathoms, and generally 8 or 9 fathoms within a mile from the shore. It is 60 miles long, and from 1 to 4 miles wide.

Dardanelles, two castles, one on each side of the strait, so called, between the Archipelago and the sea of Marmora, built in 1658 by Mahomet IV. to guard the entrance of the narrow sea, which is here only 2,700 yards wide. The one on the European side is called Sestos, or the castle of Romania, or of Europe, the other, on the Asiatic side, is called Abydos, or the castle of Natolia or Asia. These are called the Old Dardanelles, or 2d castles of Europe and Asia, to distinguish them from two others, built at the entrance of the strait, 10 miles SW., one on each side, and called the New Dardanelles, or 1st castles of Europe and Asia.

It is surrounded with mountains and rocks covered with fir trees, which form around its waters a sort of amphitheatre, except at the south, where there is an issue towards Munster. It is violently agitated before and during a storm, and throws up petrifications, particularly fossil shells.

Darent, r. Eng., which runs into the Thames, 3 N. Dartford. The mouth near the Thames is called Dartford Creek.

Darfur, Darfoor, or Dar Fur, km. Central Africa, between Abyssinia and Bornou, having Kordofan and the country of the Shilluks east, separating it from Sennaar and Abyssinia; Ber-goo west, which separates it from Bornou and Begherme, and barbarous nations south. The extent and limits are not well defined. Pop. estimated by Browne at about 200,000; army about 2,000 men. The chief towns are Cobbe, the capital, Sweini, Kourma, Cubcaba, Rill, Cours, Shoba, Gidid, and Gelle. The religion is Mahometan, the government despotic.

The seasons are divided into wet and dry, the wet beginning in June and ending in September. Agriculture is the chief employment. The principal grains are the dokn, a species of millet, and kassob; but little wheat is raised. Water melons, gourds, hemp, Cayenne pepper, tobacco, tamarinds, &c. are cultivated. The camel, of various species, is common. The wild animals are the lion, leopard, hyena, wolf, jackal, buffalo, elephant, hippopotamus, rhinoceros, camelopardalis, crocodile, &c.

The houses of the inhabitants are extremely simple, the roofs flat, the walls built of clay. The Furians are quite black, the hair short and woolly, of very dissolute manners; polygamy has no limits, and the closest ties of kindred often no bar to matrimonial connexions.—Commerce is carried on by caravans chiefly with Egypt; in a less degree with Mecca. The principal exports are slaves, camels, ivory; the horns, teeth, and hides of the rhinoceros and hippopotamus; ostrich feathers, gum, pimento, paroquets, and white copper.

Darien, p-t. & s-p. M'Intosh co., Georgia, on the north and principal channel of the Altamaha, near its entrance into St. Simon's sound, 12 miles from the bar, 63 SSW. Savannah, 165 SE. Milledgeville, W. 722. Lon. 81. 37. W. Lat. 31. 23. N. Pop. in 1810, 206; in 1820, upwards of 1,000. It stands on a high sandy bluff, and contains a Presbyterian meeting house, a bank, and a printing office. It has lately risen into importance, and is a flourishing town. The bar has 14 feet at low water. Exertions are making to remove the obstructions to the navigation, and to render this the emporium of the fertile country watered by the Oakmulgee and Oconee, branches of the Altamaha.

Darien, pr. S. America, in New-Grenada, bounded NW. by the province of Panama, NE. by the Spanish Main, E. by Zinu, S. by Choco, and W. by the Pacific ocean. This province is almost wholly in the power of the natives, who are said to amount to 30,000. The chief towns are Cana and St. Maria de Darien. It is mountainous and rugged, interspersed with fertile plains.

Darien, (Gulf of,) on the coast of the province of Darien; 26 leagues from N. to S., and 9 from E. to W. Several rivers flow into it, the largest of which is the Atrato. The coast is full of sharp and inaccessible shoals, and only towards the west and south are there fit places for disembarking. The limits of the gulf are sometimes extended to the sea that washes the shores of the provinces of Panama and Darien.

Darien, (Isthmus of,) neck of land, which unites North and South America, composed of the provinces of Darien and Panama, which belong to New-Grenada, and of Veragua, which belongs to Guatemala. It lies in the form of a crescent, about the great bay of Panama on the south, and having the gulf of Mexico on the north. It is 300 miles long, and generally about 60 wide, but where narrowest, between the ports of Porto Bello and Panama, only 37. This part is sometimes called the isthmus of Panama. The country here is made up of sickly valleys and stupendous mountains, which seem to be placed as eternal barriers between the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, which can be distinctly seen at the same time from the summits. These mountains here forbid the idea of a canal; but by going Lat. 12. N., and joining the head of the lake Nicaragua to a small river, which runs into the Pacific ocean, and forming a canal 30 miles long, through a low, level country, a communication between the two seas becomes practicable. See Cupica.

Dead Sea, or Asphaltites, i. e. the Lake of Bitumen, anciently called also the Sea of Sodom, Salt Sea, and Lake Sirbon, and now by the Arabs Bahheret-Lut, i. e. the Sea of Lot, lake, Palestine, about 60 or 70 miles long from N. to S., and 10 or 15 wide; according to Mariti 180 miles in circuit; but its dimensions are stated with considerable diversity. It is bordered on the east by lofty hills, having rugged and frightful precipices; on the north by the plain of Jericho, through which it receives the river Jordan; other streams flow into it, but it has no visible outlet. The water is clear and limpid; uncommonly salt, and even bitter; and of greater specific gravity than any other hitherto discovered. The proportion of the weight of the salts held in solution to the whole weight of the water, varies according to different experiments by chemical analysis, from 25 to nearly 50 per cent. The chief ingredients are muriate of magnesia, muriate of lime, and muriate of soda. Fragments of sulphur and bitumen, and mines of fossil are found near the shores; and great quantities of asphaltum, or mineral pitch, are seen floating on the surface of the water.

The fishes carried hither from the Jordan, according to the concurring testimony of travellers, speedily perish; but the latest observers affirm that there are small ones in the lake peculiar to itself, as also that a few small and low vegetables may be seen in it. The immediate vicinity is destitute of vegetation, dull, cheerless, and inanimate; hence probably its name of Dead Sea. Among the absurd fables formerly circulated respecting this sea, it was affirmed that the pestiferous vapours hovering over it were fatal to birds attempting to fly across. But this is contradicted by various recent travellers. "The waters of this lake," says

Dr. E. D. Clarke, "notwithstanding the numberless assertions to the contrary, swarm with fishes, shells abound on its shores, certain birds make it a place of peculiar resort, and there is nothing insalubrious in its exhalation." Five cities, including Sodom and Gomorrah, situated on this spot, were swallowed up, according to the scriptures, on account of their unparalleled iniquity. The neighbourhood of the lake abounds in volcanic products, and on the western shore are many ruins. A kind of fruit, called the apple of Sodom, of beautiful appearance, but never ripening, and when opened disclosing nothing but ashes, is frequently mentioned in history. But no fruit with these characteristics, has been found by recent travellers.

Towns. Dover is the seat of government. Wilmington is the largest town. The other most considerable towns are Newcastle, Georgetown, Smyrna, Milford, and Lewistown.

Religion. Presbyterians are the most numerous denomination of christians. The number of congregations of the several denominations has been stated as follows:—Presbyterians 24, Episcopalians 14, Baptists 8, Friends 4. There are besides a considerable number of Methodists.

Government. The legislature consists of a senate chosen for 3 years, and a house of representatives chosen annually on the first Tuesday in October. The governor is chosen by the people for 3 years, but can hold the office only 3 years in 6.

Rivers. The principal rivers besides the Delaware which forms a part of the boundary, are Brandywine creek, Christiana creek, Duck creek, Mispillion creek, Indian river, Choptank, and Nanticoke.

Face of the Country. The general aspect of this state is that of an extended plain, favourable for cultivation. Some of the upper parts of the county of Newcastle, indeed, are irregular and broken. The heights of Christiana are lofty and commanding, and the hills of Brandywine are rough and stony; but in the lower country there is very little diversity of level. The highest ridge between Delaware and Chesapeake bays passes through this state. On the summit of the ridge there is a chain of swamps, from which a number of waters descend on the west to Chesapeake bay, and on the east to the river Delaware. Along the Delaware river, and about 9 miles into the interior, the soil is generally a rich clay, which produces large timber, and is well adapted to the purposes of agriculture; but between this tract and the swamps the soil is light, sandy, and of an inferior quality. In the county of Newcastle the soil is a strong clay; in Kent it is mixed with sand, and in Sussex the sand greatly predominates.

Productions. The principal articles of produce are wheat, Indian corn, rye, barley, oats, flax, buck wheat, and potatoes. The county of Sussex contains some excellent grazing lands, and it exports great quantities of timber, obtained from Cypress swamp, on Indian river, which extends about 6 miles from E. to W., and nearly 12 from N. to S. The staple commodity is wheat, which is produced of a superior quality, and is highly esteemed for its uncommon softness and whiteness, and is preferred in foreign markets. Large establishments have been erected for manufacturing wheat into flour. Of these the Brandywine mills, in the vicinity of Wilmington, are the most important. These are the finest collection of mills in the United States, and are celebrated both for the excellence and the quantity of flour which they manufacture.

Minerals. Delaware contains very few minerals. In the county of Sussex, and among the branches of the Nanticoke, are large quantities of bog iron ore, well adapted for casting. Before the revolution it was wrought to a great extent, but since that event the business has declined.

Delft, (an. Delphi), city, Neth., in S. Holland, on a canal called the Schie, which, after traversing the city, runs into the Meuse at Schiedam and Delftshaven; 8 NW. Rotterdam, 29 SSW. Amsterdam. Lon. 4. 22. E. Lat. 52. 1. N. Pop. 13,852. It is tolerably well built, but is old and of gloomy aspect; most of the streets divided by narrow stagnant canals, except in the centre there are two spacious streets, with broad canals, bordered with rows of trees. It has 9 churches. The old church contains the tombs of admirals Van Tromp and Heyn. In the new church is a superb monument erected to the memory of prince Maurice and of Hugo Grotius, who was born here in 1583. Here are manufactured earthen ware, called Delft ware, tobacco pipes, cloth, and carpets. Butter and beer are articles of wholesale trade.

Delftshaven, s-p. Neth., in S. Holland. on N side of the Meuse, with a canal cut to join the Schie, by means of which boats may pass to Delft, the Hague, and other places; 2 SW. Rotterdam, 8 SSE. Delft. Lon. 4. 20. E. Lat. 51. 54. N. Pop. 2,680. It is strongly fortified, and well defended by dams.

Delfzuyl, or Delfsyzl, fortress, Neth., in Groningen, in the Ommeland, at the mouth of the Damster, where it empties itself into the Ems; 11 WSW. Emden, 15 NE. Groningen. Lon. 6. 44. E. Lat. 53. 19. N. Pop. 811. It has often been demolished and rebuilt, and is now a strong place, fortified with good ramparts, 7 bastions, and a citadel, with large and deep ditches; the harbour is very convenient, and will contain a great number of vessels.

Delgada, point, on N. coast of the straits of Magellan.

Delhi, p-t. & cap. Delaware co. N. Y., on the Delaware; 68 W. Catskill, 90 SW. Albany, W. 354. Pop. 2,285. The township is extensive; near its centre there is a pleasant village containing the county buildings, and 30 or 40 houses.

Delhi, t. Hamilton co. Ohio. Pop. 1,158.

Dethi, pr. Hind., bounded NW. by Lahore, N. by the Himalah mountains, which separate it from Thibet, E. by Kemaoon and Oude, S. by Agra, and W. by Agimere and Moulton; lying chiefly between Lat. 28. and 31. N.; about 250 miles long, and 180 broad. Pop. estimated at about 5,000,000; Hindoos, Mahometans, and Seiks. The chief towns are Delhi, Schaurunpour, Sirhind, Tanaser, and Anopsheer. The principal rivers are the Ganges and Jumnah. A great part of it is sterile for want of water. It was formerly much more wealthy and populous than at present; having been the seat of various wars, it has been miserably laid waste, and in some parts almost depopulated. The most fertile parts yield good pasture, wheat, barley, and sugar cane.—The part east of the Jumnah, with a considerable district round the city of Delhi, belongs in fact to the British, but its revenues are allotted to support the family and establishments of the emperor, or great mogul, now reduced to the humiliating state of dependency on a foreign power. The southern part is possessed by native chiefs in alliance with the British. The country northwest of the Jumnah, and south of the Setledge is occupied by a number of petty Seik chiefs.

Delhi, city, Hind., capital of the province of Delhi, for many years of Hindoostan, on the Jumnah; 92 NNW. Agra, 300 NW. Allahabad. Lon. 77. 9. E. Lat. 28. 43. N. Pop. variously estimated from 100, to 200,000. The ancient name was Indraput, Inderput, or Inderprest; the Mahometan name is Shahjehanabad. It was for a long time the capital of Hindoostan, the seat of the great mogul, the boast of India; and during the era of its splendour, said to have occupied a site 20 miles in length, and the ruins now cover nearly as great a space. It was taken, in 1193, by the Mahometans, under Cuttubaddeen Khan, who fixed his residence here, and on his succeeding to the throne, it became the capital of Hindoostan. In 1398, it was taken, pillaged, and reduced to a heap of ruins by Tamerlane. It afterwards partially recovered, till towards the end of the 16th century, when Akbar transferred the seat of royalty to Agra.

In 1631, the emperor Shah Jehan founded the new city of Delhi on the west bank of the Jumnah, near the ruins of the old city, and gave it the name of Shahjehanabad. During the reign of Aurengzebe, the third son of Sha Jehan, the revenue of the city amounted to £3,813,594; and its population was computed at 2,000,000, probably an exaggeration. It continued to increase in splendour and importance till the invasion of Nadir Shah in 1739, when 100,000 inhabitants were massacred, and £62,000,000 sterling of plunder are said to have been collected. It was again pillaged and depopulated in 1756, 1759, and 1760, by Ahmed Abdallah. Since 1803 it has been in reality subject to the British government, though still the residence of the emperor or great mogul, who has a nominal authority, but is virtually dependent on the British.

Modern Delhi contains the remains of many splendid palaces, and is adorned with many beautiful mosques still in good repair, the most remarkable of which is Jama Musjid, or great cathedral. This mosque is 261 feet long, the whole front faced with white marble, surrounded at top with 3 magnificent domes of white marble, flanked by 2 minarets. The city has 2 spacious streets, leading from the palace to the principal gates, and many good houses built of brick. The rest of the streets are narrow and irregular; and the houses built without order, of brick, mud, bamboos, and mats, generally covered with thatch, resembling a motley group of villages, rather than an extensive town. The bazars are but indifferently furnished. Cotton cloths and indigo are manufactured in the town and neighbourhood. In the vicinity, on the banks of the Jumnah, corn, rice, millet, and indigo are principally cultivated.—The Baptists have a missionary here.

Dendera, (an. Tentyra), t. Egypt, at the edge of a small but fertile plain, about a mile from the left bank of the Nile; 48 SSE. Girgê, 242 S. Cairo. Lon. 32. 31. E. Lat. 26. 8. N. It is the residence of an Arabian prince, who takes the title of Emir. The people of Tentyra were famous for their enmity to the crocodile. The inhabitants of this city were great worshippers of Isis and Venus. The remains of 3 temples, the largest of which is in a high state of preservation, still exist. The largest and one of the other two were dedicated to Isis; and the former affords the noblest specimen remaining of Grecian architecture. From the many heaps of ruins that are seen, the city appears to have been large; they extend about 1 mile from E. to W. and half a mile from N. to S. The town has been much frequented since the time of its ancient splendour, for the buildings are almost filled up with ashes and rubbish.

Population. The population, including all the foreign possessions, was stated by Malte Brun, in 1820, at 1,811,400. Births in 1820, 32,376; out of wedlock 3,089. Deaths 23,532.

Danish foreign possessions. A part of Greenland; Santa Cruz and St. Thomas in the West Indies; Tranquebar on the coast of Coromandel; some factories in the Nicobar islands; Christiansburg and other small places on the coast of Guinea.

Towns. The chief towns are Copenhagen, the capital, Altona, Flensburg, Elsinore, Odensee, Sleswick, Kiel, Gluckstadt, Aalborg, Aarhus, Viborg, and Ripen.

Government. Absolute monarchy.

Revenue. Between £1,500,000 and 2,000,000.

Military Force. About 30,000 men.

Navy. The navy consists of 3 ships of the line, four frigates, and some smaller vessels; seamen 4,000.—The whole number of seafaring people is upwards of 40,000.

Religion. Lutheranism is the established religion, with 7 bishops and 2 superintendants; but other religions are tolerated.

Education. Considerable attention is paid to education. There are 2 universities, at Copenhagen and Kiel; a college at Odensee, and an academy at Altona.

Language. The language is a dialect of the Teutonic, but French and High Dutch are spoken at court.

Inhabitants. The Danes are tall and robust, with good features and complexion; flaxen, yellow, or red hair, very hospitable.

Face of the country. The continental part forms a long continued plain, interrupted by few hills; watered by no large rivers, but has numerous rivulets and lakes.

Soil and productions. The soil is generally sandy, but a large proportion is fertile, producing oats, barley, beans, pease, madder, great quantities of potatoes, some wheat and tobacco; and much of it is good for grazing.

Climate. The climate is healthy and uniformly temperate, but the atmosphere during a great part of the year is humid and cloudy.

Commerce. Denmark is remarkably well situated for trade, and its commerce is considerable. The exports consist of grain, horses, cattle, beef, pork, butter, and cheese. The shipping, in 1800, amounted to 250,000 tons.

Deptford, t. Eng., on the Thames, partly in Kent, and partly in Surrey; 4 E. London. Pop. 19,833. It was generally known in ancient records by the name of Deptford Stroud, alias West Greenwich. It is now a large and populous town, though it has no market, and is divided into Upper and Lower Deptford.

The greatest support and consequence of Deptford arises from its royal dockyard, with its fine wet docks, and numerous buildings for the manufacture and preservation of naval stores. The space occupied by the whole is not less than 31 acres. Besides the national docks, there are several others belonging to ship-builders for merchants' vessels. At Deptford is the society of the Trinity House, founded 1515, by sir Thomas Spert, for the regulation of seaman, and the convenience of ships and mariners on the coast. There are annually relieved by this company about 3,000 poor seamen, their widows, and orphans, at the expense of £6,000.

Herculaneum, p-t. & cap. Jefferson co. Mis-souri, on W. bank of the Mississippi, 30 miles above St. Genevieve, 29 S. St. Louis, 35 NE. Potosi, W. 909. It contains a court house, a jail, and about 40 houses. Here is a warehouse for storing lead and merchandise; and near the town are 3 shot towers, where shot is manufac-tured by letting it fall down the banks of the Mississippi, which are high and formed of lime-stone. The exports, for a period of 18 months, ending June, 1818, consisting of lead, shot, boards, flour, whiskey, gunpowder, &c., amount-ed to $353,681,87. About one half of the lead obtained from the lead mines of Missouri, has, for several years past, been exported from this place. The annual quantity exported in the years 1817 and 1818, amounted to about 2,000,000 lbs.

Herculaneum, ancient city, Naples, near where Portici now stands; 5 E. by S. Naples. It was totally overwhelmed by an eruption of mount Vesuvius, A. D. 79, in the beginning of the reign of the emperor Titus, being buried under volcanic substances to a depth of 70 feet. In the years 1689 and 1711, upon digging in these parts, something of this city was discov-ered. In the year 1738, fresh attempts began to be made, and since that time a prodigious number of ancient monuments of every kind have been discovered, such as basilica, 2 tem-ples, a theatre, paintings, statues, bustos, furni-ture, and utensils; whole streets have been cleared, and are found to be paved and flagged on both sides. The relics are found in a sur-prising state of preservation, and afford a good idea of the manners of the age, and improve-ment in the arts. The statues, vases, tripods, and lamps are often of the finest workmanship, being much superior to the pictures. The re-lics, which have lately excited the greatest in-terest, are the manuscripts; chiefly in Greek, but part also in Latin. The number of manu-scripts and fragments originally brought to the museum of Portici, was 1,696; of which, ac-cording to a report published by sir Humphrey Davy in 1819, 88 had been unrolled, and found legible; 319 found illegible; 1,265 not then operated upon.—See Pompeii.

There were formerly 5 churches, but now only 2, with places of worship for Dissenters and Quakers. It has a large school for the younger children belonging to Christ's hospital in London, and markets on Thursday and Saturday; and returns 2 members to parliament. The assizes for the county are held here, as likewise the quarter-sessions and county courts.

At the distance of $2\frac{1}{2}$ m. on the road to London, is the East India College, founded in 1806, to cooperate with the college at Calcutta, in training young men for the service of the East India company. The building is finely situated, large, elegant, and capable of accommodating 100 students, having cost £70,000. About 30 students, on an average, are annually drawn off for the civil service. The students are instructed by lectures, arranged under 4 heads, 1. oriental literature, 2. mathematics, 3. classical and general literature, 4. history, political economy, English constitution and laws. In each department are 2 professors. The principal teaches the students in natural and revealed religion.

Hertfordshire, co. Eng., bounded N. by Bedfordshire, and Cambridgeshire, E. by Essex, S. by Middlesex, and W. by Buckinghamshire and Bedfordshire. The shape is very irregular, on account of the projections and intersections of other counties, and measures about 27 miles from N. to S. and 23 from E. to W. Sq. m. 530. Pop. 111,654; 12,000 families engaged in agriculture, 7,200 in trade and manufactures, 3,444 otherwise. It contains 19 market towns, (Hertford, St. Albans, Ware, Royston, &c.) 135 parishes. The soil is naturally barren, but in a high state of cultivation, and covered with beautiful villas and country seats.

Cassel is the capital, but Hanau is the principal trading town.—The sovereign is styled elector of Hesse and grand duke of Fulda. The government is a limited monarchy. The inhabitants are composed of about 320,000 Reformed, 142,000 Lutherans, 73,000 Catholics, 9,000 Jews, and 230 Mennonists.—There is a university at Marburg, lyceums at Cassel and Fulda, and other seminaries elsewhere; but the Hessians are inferior to the Saxons in education.

The surface is hilly and in some parts mountainous; the soil not generally very fertile except in the province of Hanau, where it is rich, and the climate kindly. The productions are grain, potatoes, some hemp, flax, tobacco, and vines. The pasturage is generally good, and wood abundant.—The minerals are copper, silver, cobalt, iron, salt, vitriol, alum, pit coal, marble, and basalt.—The principal rivers are the Werra, Fulda, Diemel, Maine, Edder, Kinzig, Schwalm, and Lahn.

Hesse, or Hesse Darmstadt, grand duchy, Ger., divided into two distinct parts, which are separated from each other by a long stripe of land, extending along the north side of the Maine. The northern division, called Upper Hesse is nearly surrounded by Hesse Cassel and Nassau; the southern lies on the south side of the Maine, and on both sides of the Rhine. Pop. according to the official statement of 1818, 619,500.

Darmstadt is the capital; Mentz the largest town; other towns, Giessen, Worms, and Bingen. The inhabitants are mostly Lutherans, with a considerable number of Catholics and Calvinists, and some Anabaptists.—The government is a limited monarchy.—There is a university at Giessen, and classical schools at Mentz, Giessen, Worms, and Darmstadt.

The surface is generally hilly or mountainous; the soil in many parts poor, but in the valleys fertile; and pasturage generally good. The principal productions are grain, potatoes, flax, tobacco, fruits, and vegetables; and vines along the banks of the Rhine and Maine.—It produces considerable iron, copper, lead, and salt.—The climate is generally healthy, and the situation on the Rhine and Maine favourable to trade.

Hesse-Homburg, principality, Ger., at the foot of the Taurus mountains, 7 or 8 miles N. Frankfort on the Maine, with the title of Landgrave, belonging to a younger branch of the family of Hesse Darmstadt. Sq. m. 26. Pop. 6,826. The congress of Vienna, in 1815, gave to the prince the district of Meissenheim, on the west of the Rhine, containing 10,136 inhabitants, and 8 sq. m. He has also some other small districts. The total population of his territories was stated, in 1818, at 20,000. His residence is at Homburg. The religion of the family is the Calvinist.

Highlands, a natural division of Scotland, comprising the mountainous part of the country to the north and northwest, in contradistinction to the Lowlands, which comprehend the south and southeast counties. The division is formed by the Grampian mountains, which extend across the island from Argyleshire, on the Atlantic, to Aberdeenshire, on the German ocean. The 16 northern and northwestern counties lie chiefly in the Highlands; and the Hebrides are also included. The whole of this great district is wild, rugged, and mountainous; many of the mountains rise to a great height, with valleys of corresponding depth, intervening, from which, for some months in the year, the direct rays of the sun are in a great degree excluded. The vales are generally occupied by lakes or precipitous rivers. The proportion of arable land is small; it is found chiefly in the valleys and on the lakes and rivers, where there are tracts of fertile soil. In these mountains are the sources of numerous streams, which generally descend to the ocean in rapid currents.

The Highlanders are a branch of the ancient Celtæ. They were always a brave, warlike, and hardy race: divided into tribes called clans; those of inferior order being vassals of particular chieftains. They have always been fond of poetry and music, and every family of note retained a historian or bard to celebrate the heroic deeds of the chieftain and his clan. Their religion was deeply tinged with superstition; they believed in ghosts and apparitions, and practised charms and incantations. Their language is still Gaelic. Their cottages are miserable habitations, built with round stones, cemented with alternate layers of turf thatched with sods, and often with heath. Their food is chiefly oatmeal, milk, &c., with a quantity of meat for a mart at Christmas. Before the beginning of the last century, there were no regular roads to connect the Highlands with the low country. But since that time roads have been opened; they enter the mountains at 3 different parts of the low country; at Crieff, Dunkeld, and by Luss, on Loch Lomond. The feudal institutions have been undermined, and a great change has taken place in the state of property and manners. Industry and improvement have made rapid progress, and the inhabitants are now beginning to avail themselves of the resources of their country, in their mines, woods, pastures, and fisheries.

Highlands, mountainous tract, N. Y., on the banks of the Hudson, below Newburgh, between 40 and 60 miles above New York. The passage on the river through these Highlands, for the distance of about 18 miles, is romantic and grand in a high degree. The opening seems to have been formed on purpose for the passage of the noble river. Some of the principal peaks are Thunder Hill, St. Anthony's Nose, Sugar Loaf, Butter Hill, Bull Hill, Break Neck Hill, New & Old Beacon. The military post of West Point is in these Highlands.

Dominica, isl. West Indies, belonging to Great Britain; situated between Guadaloupe and Martinico; about 29 miles in length, and 16 in breadth, containing 186,436 acres of land, and divided into 10 parishes. In 1805 there were 1,594 whites, 2,822 people of colour, and 22,083 slaves. In 1815, 1,325 whites, 2,983 people of colour, and 21,728 slaves; total, 26,036. It was discovered by Columbus, Nov. 3, 1493, on Sunday; hence its name. It contains many high and rugged mountains, among which are volcanoes, that frequently discharge eruptions. From some of these mountains issue springs of hot water, whose medicinal virtues are much commended. Dominica is well watered, there being upwards of thirty rivers in the island, besides a great number of rivulets. The soil, in most of the interior country, is a light brown-coloured mould, and appears to have been washed from the mountains. Towards the sea coast, and in many of the valleys, it is a deep, black, and rich native earth, which seems well adapted to the cultivation of all the articles of West-Indian produce. The principal towns are Portsmouth, and Roseau, or Charlotte's town. The exports of the island from January 5th, 1787, to January 5th, 1788, were 71,312 cwt. of sugar; 63,392 gallons of rum; 16,803 gallons of molasses; 1,194 cwt. of cocoa; 18,149 cwt. of coffee; 11,250 pounds of indigo; 970,816 pounds of cotton; 161 cwt. of ginger, with miscellaneous articles to the value of £11,912 10s. 9d.: the whole, according to the current prices in London, to the value of £302,987 15s. Dort, or Dordrecht, city, Neth., capital of a district in South Holland; 35 S. Amsterdam. Lon. 4. 40. E. Lat. 51. 49. N. Pop. in 1818, 18,525. H. 3,954. It is situated on a small island, formed by the waters of the Meuse, the Mewre, the Rhine, and the Linge; separated from the isle of Isselmond by the Meuse, and from the isle of Beyerlandt by a canal. It was first detached from the main land November 17th, 1421, by an irruption of the rivers, which broke down the dikes, drowned 100,000 persons, and destroyed 72 villages. The town is large and well built, not regularly fortified, but defended with several towers, and contains a gymnasium, a military school, a museum, a public library, town house, hospitals, &c. Its situation is very convenient for trade.—Native, De Witt.

In 1618 and 1619, was held a famous assembly of the clergy from all the Protestant states in Europe, called the Synod of Dort, to enquire into and settle the disputes between the Arminians and Calvinists or Gomarists, otherwise called Remonstrants and Anti-remonstrants. The doctrines of Arminius were condemned; and Vorstius, with above 100 ministers and professors, were banished; John Olden Barnevelt was beheaded; the celebrated Hugo Grotius was sentenced to perpetual imprisonment; and other learned men, favourers of those opinions, were punished.

Dover, p-t. & cap., Strafford co. NH.; 4 SW. South Berwick, 10 S. by E. Rochester, 12 NW. by N. Portsmouth, 40 E. Concord, 50 SW. Portland, 60 N. Boston, W. 507. Lon. 70. 54. W. Lat. 43. 13. N. Pop. in 1810, 2,228; in 1820, 2,871. It is situated on the west side of the Piscataqua, and the Cochecho flows through it. This river has several falls, the largest of which, upwards of 40 feet perpendicular, are at the centre of the town, and afford water privileges equal to any in New England. The supply of water is abundant, and the river never rises so high as to endanger the buildings on it. These falls are 15 m. from the sea, at the head of tide water; gondolas come up to the mills, and sloops within a quarter of a mile. Large iron and cotton manufactories have lately been erected on these falls. There are also a large cotton manufactory and a cut nail manufactory, situated on falls two miles higher up the river. Dover is one of the most considerable and flourishing towns in the state. It contains a court house, a jail, a bank, a printing office, an academy, and 2 houses of public worship, 1 for Congregationalists, and 1 for Friends. The trade consists chiefly in lumber. The greatest part of the lumber exported from the state, is brought to this town. Considerable shipping is also owned here.—Dover is the oldest town in N. H., having been settled in 1623 by Edward and William Hilton. The part first settled is in the south of Dover, an elevated and beautiful neck of land, called by the Indians Winnichahannat, and by the first settlers Northam.

Dover, s-p. Eng., in Kent, on a small river that passes through part of the town, and empties itself into the harbour; 71 ESE. London. Lon. 1. 19. E. Lat. 51. 7. N. Pop. 9,074. By the Britons it was called Dour, by the Romans, Dubris, or Portus Dubris, and by the Saxons, Dorra. It is much resorted to in summer for sea bathing. The harbour can receive vessels of 400 or 500 tons at high water, and is defended by strong batteries. It is one of the original Cinque-ports, and was once walled, and defended with a castle of great antiquity; the walls are now decayed, the castle yet remains, with a constable, and a small garrison. There were formerly 7 churches, 2 only of which remain. This is the most convenient port to sail from to France, being only 26 miles across the Channel to Calais, and with a fair wind the voyage is generally performed in the tide, and packets are constantly going backwards and forwards in time of peace. Dover sends two members to parliament, and has two markets weekly, on Wednesday and Saturday.

Dresden, in Latin Dresdena and Dresda, city, Germany, capital of the kingdom of Saxony, and of the circle of Meissen, on both sides of the Elbe, at the influx of the Weisseritz; 55 ESE. Leipsic, 75 NNW. Prague, 100 SE. Berlin. Lon. 13. 43. E. Lat. 51. 3. N. Pop. in 1755, 63,000; in 1803, 49,074; in 1817, 45,000. H. 2,650. It is one of the best built towns in Europe, and has a delightful situation. In almost every direction it is approached by avenues more or less shaded, and leading through a rich and fertile tract; bounded by gentle eminences. The streets are broad, straight, kept perfectly clean, by means of sewers, and well lighted. Here is a bridge across the Elbe, built of freestone, 550 paces in length, consisting of 19 arches, and accounted the finest in Germany. The Elbe divides the city into 2 parts, and there is a third division on the Weisseritz, called Frederickstadt.

Dresden contains 11 Lutheran churches, 2 Catholic, and 1 Calvinist. It has been long noted for the fine arts; the patronage of the electoral house and the collection of the works of the great masters affording inducements to artists to repair hither. The most interesting building is the electoral, now royal palace, a spacious but irregular structure. It has a tower 355 feet in height, and a number of remarkable apartments, particularly the famous green vault, divided into 8 rooms, paved with marble, and containing statues, ivory work, vases, silver plate, and precious stones. The chancery house near the palace contains a valuable collection of paintings. The castle belonging to the king is the great depot of the porcelain manufactures. The Dutch or Japanese palace, a remarkable edifice, rearing its stately domes amid groves and thickets, contains the royal library, said to consist of 150,000 volumes, a valuable collection of porcelain, and some beautiful statues. The house of Assembly for the Saxon diet, is an elegant building. Dresden contains an academy of cadets of noble families, a military school, a medical college, 3 public libraries, 2 gymnasia, and other institutions. Outside of the city are several public gardens.—The principal manufactures are those of porcelain, mirrors, tapestry, lace, jewellery, earthen ware, and plaited straw.—A battle was fought near this city, August 1813, between the French and the combined Austrian and Russian army. The former had the advantage; 350,000 men were stated to be engaged. General Moreau was slain.

Drogheda, s-p. Ireland, in Louth, on the Boyne, on the borders of the county of Meath; 23 N. Dublin. Lon. 6. 22. W. Lat. 53. 43. N. Pop. in 1814, 16,023. It is large, regular, and well built, and consists of 2 parishes. The harbour is tolerable, but has a bar at the entrance, which prevents the passage of ships of burden, except at high water. It exports large quantities of corn, and imports coals and other heavy commodities, which are carried up the river, and distributed by means of a canal. It is a town and county of itself, and sends 1 member to parliament. It was anciently called Tredah, remarkable for its strength. In 1649, it was taken by storm by Oliver Cromwell. Near it the prince of Orange obtained a complete victory over the army of James II, called the battle of the Boyne.

It is very ancient, and was the seat of government while Norway remained a separate kingdom. It is built of wood, and contains a gymnasium, and an academy of sciences, with a library. It is situated on a gulf of the North sea, to which it gives name, at the mouth of the Nyd, nearly surrounded by the sea and lofty mountains, with a well-frequented seaport, but not capable of receiving large vessels, on account of rocks at the entrance of the harbour. It is 58 NNW. of the copper mines of Roraas. The principal exports are masts, fir-timber, copper, iron, pitch, tar, stock-fish, skins, potash, &c. In exchange, they receive and import spices, wine, salt, brandy, corn, tobacco, cloth, &c.

Druses, a free and warlike race of people of Syria, inhabiting the Castraven mountains, Lebanon and Anti-Lebanon, and all the coast from Gibail to Saida, and as far east as Balbec. Sq. m. about 1,150. Pop. variously estimated at 70,000, 120,000, and 160,000; 20,000, or 40,000 able to bear arms. The origin of the Druses is traced to a persecution and dispersion that took place about the beginning of the 11th century, among the followers of Mahomet. They are divided into a number of religious sects, some of which hold very peculiar opinions. One class assume the epithet of Okkals, i. e. Spiritualists. The people generally appear wholly indifferent to religion, following the Mahometans or Maronites in their devotions, as they find it convenient. Their language is pure Arabic. Their chief occupation is agriculture. They are robust, hardy, patient of fatigue, hunger, and cold, fierce, restless, and enterprising; in war brave to temerity, but undisciplined. Their government is of a mixed nature; their chief men are styled sheiks or emirs; the sovereign, the grand emir, whose residence is at Dair al Kamar. Bairout is the emporium of their trade.

Sq. m. 355, acres 228,211. It contained in 1790, 25,510 houses, and 107 parishes, 19 of which are in the city of Dublin. This country is in general flat, except towards the S. where it is mountainous and rocky; towards the sea it is broken into bays and creeks, with several places of resort for sea-bathing. Five members are returned to parliament. Dublin is the capital, and the chief river is the Liffey.

Dublin, (an Eblana,) city & capital of Ireland; 60 W. Holyhead, in Wales, 330 WNW. London. Lon. 6. 19. W. Lat. 53. 21. N. Pop. 187,939. H. 16,458. Abp. see.

It is situated at the bottom of a spacious bay, 7 miles from the sea, on the river Liffey, nearly in the centre of the county to which it gives name; extending about 2 miles each way. The river Liffey is crossed by 6 stone bridges; the sides are embanked with spacious quays, so that vessels can load and unload before the houses of the merchants. The bay is about 7 miles broad, and unsafe in stormy weather; but the channel is confined for 3 miles on each side by a broad stone wall, for the protection of ships in the road. Vessels which draw more than 7 feet cannot come up to the quay. The entrance into the harbour is thought to be one of the most beautiful in Europe. The commerce of the city is extensive. The amount of import duties paid at the custom house, in 1817, was £945,000; of all other ports in Ireland £1,143,000.

There is scarcely any city in Europe, which, in proportion to its size, abounds more in magnificent and useful buildings, and charitable institutions. It contains 2 cathedrals, 19 parish churches, besides several chapels of the established religion, about 28 Catholic chapels, 2 meeting houses of the church of Scotland, 7 of other dissenters, 4 of Methodists, 2 of Quakers, 1 Lutheran, and 1 French Calvinist. The houses, with the exception of the principal public edifices, are generally of brick, from 3 to 5 stories high.

The university was projected in 1311, but did not flourish till the reign of Queen Elizabeth. It consists of a chancellor, a vice-chancellor, provost, vice-provost, 22 fellows, and 5 royal professorships, of divinity, common law, civil law, physic, and Greek; besides these, 3 others were founded by sir Patrick Dun, of physic, chirurgery, and pharmacy; there are likewise professorships of mathematics, oriental languages, oratory, history, and natural philosophy. The library contains 68,946 volumes. The number of students attending Sept. 1818, was 1,209; and in 1820, about 1,500. The building is noble and spacious, and consists of two quadrangles, and presents a grand front of 300 feet, and extends in depth 600 feet. Graduates and students in any one of the three universities, Oxford, Cambridge, and Dublin, are, by established usage, admitted ad eundem in either of the other two. On a rocky hill about 4 miles west of the city there is an observatory. The Dublin Society, incorporated in 1742, a national institution for promoting agriculture, manufactures, and the fine arts, consists of 700 members, and has an extensive library, a large cabinet of minerals, collections in sculpture, &c.

The castle, originally a strong fortification, completed in 1213, now the government house, consists chiefly of 2 squares. The custom house is a most magnificent structure, in front 375 feet by 209, finished in 1790, at the expense of £255,000. The parliament house, the royal exchange, and the courts of justice, are magnificent buildings. Other public buildings of note are the linen-hall, the barracks, the theatre, the tollsell or town-house, hospitals for invalids, for the children of soldiers and sailors, and for the reception of the aged and infirm; for lying-in women, for the blind, &c.—The royal college of physicians was established in the year 1679; the royal college of surgeons, in the year 1785; the academy for the advancement of science, polite literature, and antiquities, in 1786. Three members are returned to the imperial parliament, 2 for the city, and 1 for the university.—Natives, Usher, Denham, Swift, Parnel, Cunningham, Steele, and Sheridan.

Durham, co. Eng., bounded N. by Northumberland, E. by the German sea, S. by Yorkshire, from which it is divided by the river Tees, and W. by Westmoreland and Cumberland. Its shape is triangular; it is divided into four wards, which contain one city, and 9 towns. It is 45 miles long, and 36 broad. Sq. m. 1,040. Pop. 117,625; nearly one half employed in trade and manufactures. It is usually called the bishopric of Durham, or the county Palatine of Durham, from the great power possessed by the bishops, who were formerly sovereign princes in their diocess. Near the river Tees the land is rich, consisting of a loamy rich clay, and is generally fertile near the other rivers; other parts are not so good. The climate is very uncertain, and the harvest hazardous; wheat, barley, oats, and peas, are the chief productions; beans are seldom raised in the western part of the county. Durham is the capital.

Durham, city, Eng., capital of a county of the same name; 66 NNW. York, 120 S. Edinburgh, 259 N. London. Lon. 1. 34. W. Lat. 54. 47. N. Pop. 7,530. It is situated on seven hills, and surrounded by others more lofty, and has been whimsically compared to a crab, the body being represented by the centre of the town, the cathedral, &c. and the claws by the several streets branching every way. It is almost surrounded and intersected every way by the Were. It is the see of a bishop, suffragan of York, who is lord paramount of the county, and earl of Segberg. The diocess extends over the counties of Durham and Northumberland. The cathedral is a grand Gothic building 411 feet in length, with a central tower 214 feet high. There are 6 other parish churches, 2 Catholic chapels, and houses of worship for Presbyterians, Methodists, and Quakers. The town has a weekly market and 3 annual fairs, and is noted for its mustard. It returns two members to parliament.—Near Durham a signal victory was obtained by the English over the Scots, when king David Bruce was taken prisoner.

Eastport is the most commercial town in the eastern part of Maine. It is very well situated for trade, having an easy communication with the interior by the rivers which flow into the bay. Its harbour is one of the best in the U. S., capacious enough to contain a large navy, and of safe entrance. The wharfs are built nearly 40 feet high, on account of the extraordinary tide in the bay of Fundy. The common tides here rise 25 feet. The shores of Moose island and the other smaller islands, have all the preparations necessary for curing fish, and unloading lumber and other articles of commerce. In 1820 a handsome toll bridge, 1,200 feet long, was erected over the ferry between Moose island and the main land, connecting Eastport with Perry. About 1,500 tons of shipping are owned in this town. The exports consist of lumber and provisions of various kinds.

Eddystone Rocks, well known to seamen who navigate the English Channel, consisting of 3 principal ridges, and extending 600 or 700 miles in length. They lie nearly in the fair way from the Start to the Lizard, and are therefore an object of the utmost importance to mariners. Hence it is, that on the summit of the largest rock a lighthouse has been erected, to serve as a beacon or signal, to avoid the danger, as they are covered with a flood tide, but become dry at the ebb. The foundation of the lighthouse is one entire solid mass of stones to the height of 35 feet, engrafted into each other, and united by every means of additional strength. It is about 80 feet in height; 15 SSW. Plymouth, 45 E. Lizard Point. Lon. 4. 15. W. Lat. 50. 11. N.

Edinburgh, city, Scot., capital of the kingdom and of the county to which it gives name; 42 E. Glasgow, 396 N. London. Lon. 3. 10. W. Lat. 55. 58. N. Pop. in 1811, including Leith, 102,987; of the city alone 82,624. Males 35,275; females 47,329. It is 1½ m. from the frith of Forth, surrounded on all sides by lofty hills, excepting on the north, where the ground declines gently towards the frith of Forth. On the east, in the immediate vicinity of the city, are the abrupt and rocky elevations of Calton hill, Arthur's-seat, and Salisbury-crag; the last rising to the elevation of 800 feet above the sea; on the south are the hills of Braid and the Pentland hills; and on the west the hill of Corstorphine. The city stands on high and uneven ground, being built on three eminences, and the hills by which it is encompassed, particularly the Salisbury-crag, which form a range of naked and perpendicular rocks, rising like a wall to the summit of the hill, render its situation singularly romantic; and in the vicinity are many fine walks and interesting views.

The city is nearly 2 miles in length; and almost as much in breadth, about 8 miles circuit; divided by a valley into two parts, Old and New Town. The former has been built at different periods, with little order or regularity, and the houses in some parts rise to the height of 11 stories. The principal street, High street, is more than a mile long, and in some parts 90 feet wide. The New Town is built on the northernmost of the eminences, and is connected with the Old by the North-bridge and the Earthen-mounds, an immense collection of rubbish. It is entirely of modern erection, being built altogether of stone, and disposed in ample streets and spacious squares, which for elegance and regularity are scarcely exceeded by those of any other city in the world. The three principal streets in the New Town, are Prince's street, 4,110 feet long by 100 broad; George's street, 2,640 feet by 115; and Queen's street, 4,440 by 100. Leith, the port of Edinburgh, is nearly 2 miles distant to the northeast, but the space is gradually decreasing.

Of all the public works the Castle is the most remarkable. It is situated at the western extremity of the Old Town, on a rugged rock, which rises on 3 sides from a level plain to the height of 150 to 200 feet, in some parts perpendicular. The summit is crowned with military works, presenting an aspect inexpressibly grand and romantic. The castle occupies an area of 7 acres. On the opposite or eastern extremity of the Old Town stands the palace of Holyrood, a large quadrangle of hewn stone, for several centuries the residence of the kings of Scotland. Other remarkable edifices are the Parliament house, now occupied by the supreme courts, the Royal Exchange, the Register-office, custom house, the Excise-office, the Physicians' hall, the university, and a number of churches. On the summit of Calton hill stands a monument erected in honour of lord Nelson, 108 feet in height.

There are 49 places of public worship; 18 belonging to the establishment, 6 to Episcopalians, 4 to Burghers, 3 to Anti-Burghers, 4 to the Relief, 4 to Baptists, 2 to Independents, 1 Gaelic, 1 Methodist, 1 Cameronian, 1 Berean, 1 Glassite, 1 Catholic, 1 Quaker, and 1 Unitarian. The principal charitable institution is Heriot's hospital, for educating and maintaining the sons of burgesses and freemen. It was erected in 1650, at the expense of £30,000, and had, in 1818, 175 youths. There are 6 or 8 other hospitals. The city contains 12 banking companies. The bank of Scotland and the Royal Bank, have each a capital of £1,000,000.

The university of Edinburgh was founded in 1582, and is one of the most celebrated seminaries in the world, and as a medical school is not surpassed by any in Europe. It has 27 professors, 3 of theology, 4 of law, 11 of medicine, and 9 of arts and sciences, and was attended, in 1819, by 2,250 students. The mode of instruction, as in the German Protestant universities, is by lectures. No particular course of academical education is followed, nor do the professors exercise any control over the other pursuits of the students. Every student attends what lectures he chooses, and lives where and how he pleases. The university has a library of upwards of 50,000 volumes, an excellent museum of natural history, and a botanic garden, occupying about 5 acres.—The High-school, the principal grammar school of the city, was established in 1578, and has a rector and 4 masters; attended in 1818, by 800 scholars. There is an academy for design, and a royal academy for the practice of horsemanship.

Of the literary associations the most important is the Royal Society, established in 1782. There are also the Royal Society of Antiquaries, the Wernerian Society, the Astronomical Institution having an observatory on Calton-hill, the Highland Society, the Faculty of Advocates, and the Royal Colleges of Physicians and Surgeons. The professions both of law and medicine are greatly distinguished. The number enrolled on the list of advocates, in 1814, was 276, though scarcely more than 30 gain a livelihood exclusively by their profession. The Advocates library contains about 80,000 printed volumes, and 1,000 MSS; the Attorneys' library 15, or 20,000.

Edinburgh is supported chiefly by its courts of justice, of which the jurisdiction extends all over Scotland, and by their numerous retainers; also by the university and other seminaries. It is a great literary metropolis, a rendezvous of luxury and fashion, and is the resort during the winter of many opulent families. It is neither a trading or manufacturing town, except for administering to the wants of the inhabitants. The business of printing and bookselling is carried on to a great extent; and various periodical and other publications have a high reputation. Among them may be mentioned the Edinburgh Review, which, in 1818, circulated 14,000 quarterly copies. Two newspapers are published thrice a week, 2 twice a week, and 3 once a week. The character and manners of the inhabitants are such as may reasonably be expected in the literary metropolis of a well educated kingdom.—Natives, Leighton, Burnet, Hume, Blair, &c.

Edinburghshire, or Mid Lothian, co. Scot., bounded N. by the frith of Forth, E. by Haddingtonshire, Berwickshire, and Roxburghshire, S. by Selkirkshire, Peebleshire, and Lanerkshire, and W. by Linlithgowshire. Its form is nearly the segment of a circle, about 30 miles from E. to W., from 6 to 20 from N. to S. Sq. miles 630. Acres 230,400. Pop. in 1811, EGYPT, country, Africa, bounded N. by the Mediterranean, E. by the isthmus of Suez and the Red sea, S. by Nubia, and W. by the deserts of Lybia; between Lat. 23. 45. & 31. 27. N.; 600 miles long, and 200 or 300 broad. Sq. m. about 120,000; of the cultivated part about 17,000.

Divisions. Egypt is divided into Upper and Lower; the former extending 400 miles, from Syene to Cairo; the latter from Cairo to the Mediterranean, 100 miles in length. This includes the Delta of the Nile, where the river, dividing itself into several channels, diffuses fertility over an alluvial tract of from 50 to 100 miles in breadth. The valuable part of Upper Egypt is a narrow belt of land extending on both sides of the Nile, not exceeding 27 miles in breadth, and enclosed between two ridges of mountains. Some geographers divide Egypt into 3 parts.—1st, Upper Egypt, called by the Greeks Thebais, now Said or Al Said, and extending from Syene to Manfalout; 2d, Middle Egypt, called by the Greeks Heptanomis, now Vostani; and, 3d, Lower Egypt, now called Bahira, or Rif; and including the Delta.

Towns. The principal towns of Egypt are Cairo, the capital, Alexandria, Damietta, Rosetta, Gizeh, Mansora, Menuf, Suez, Fayoum, Girge, Asna, Siut, Benisuef, Manfalout, Syene, and Dendera.

Population. The population of Egypt, in ancient times, stated by some at 7, or 8,000,000; by others, very improbably, at 20,000,000. It is now estimated at about 2,500,000; but by some as high as 4,000,000.

Inhabitants. The inhabitants are Copts, Arabs, Turks, and Jews. The Copts are the original race, descended from the most ancient inhabitants, and have been estimated at 200,000. The Arabs constitute two-thirds of the inhabitants. The Turks and Jews are numerous in the cities. The Mamelukes, a race descended from Georgian and Circassian slaves, and heretofore forming a part of the military force, and possessed of great power, were, in 1798, driven out of the country.

Religion. The Copts profess Christianity, and are of the Eutychian sect, and under the government of the patriarch of Alexandria, who also claims supremacy over the churches of Abyssinia. The rest of the inhabitants, except the Jews, are Mahometans.

Government. Egypt is subject to Turkey, and is governed by a pacha, in the name of the Porte.

Language. The Arabic is the prevailing language. The Coptic, the language of the ancient Egyptians, with a mixture of Greek and Arabic, is no longer spoken.

The Nile. This great river, the only one in Egypt, forms the most remarkable feature of the country; and it is to this river that Egypt is chiefly indebted for its fertility.

Soil and productions. The lands inundated by the Nile are exceedingly fertile, and easily cultivated. The ground, softened by long moisture, requires only to be slightly stirred, and the seed being thrown in, sinks by its own weight. It produces in abundance the fruits both of the tropics and the temperate zone; corn and rice grow in equal perfection. Wheat, barley, sugar-cane, indigo, cotton, flax, vines, olives, dates, melons, citrons, oranges, apricots, tamerinds, &c. are cultivated. That part of the country not watered by the Nile is mostly desert.

Climate. The climate is peculiarly characterized by an almost entire absence of rain. The falling of a few drops is a very uncommon occurrence, and is regarded by the inhabitants as almost a miracle. Thunder and lightning are nearly as rare. The heat of summer is very intense, more so than in other countries under the same parallel. The ravages of the plague are frequent, and the ophthalmia, a severe disease affecting the eyes, is peculiar to Egypt.

The Simoon. For about 50 days in the spring the country is subject to this terrible wind from the desert, which is intensely hot and dry, threatening almost the extinction of animal life. It seldom continues more than 3 days.

Antiquities. Egypt abounds with stupendous monuments of antiquity, as pyramids, obelisks, temples, and catacombs. The pyramids were accounted by the ancients one of the seven wonders of the world. The largest, called the pyramid of Cheops, is, according to the measurement of Greaves, 499 feet high, with a square base of 693 feet, and consisting chiefly of a solid mass of masonry. The catacombs are subterraneous galleries, appropriated to the reception of the dead. Mummies, or embalmed bodies, are obtained from them, which were deposited there 3 or 4,000 years since. For a notice of some of the ruins, see Thebes, Dendera, Edfu, &c.

Elba, p. t. Genesee co. N. Y.; 5 N. Batavia, 263 W. by N. Albany, W. 381. Pop. 1,333.

Elba, isl. in the Mediterranean sea, near the coast of Tuscany, about 8 miles in length, and 2 in breadth, known to the Greeks by the name of Aithalai, and to the Romans by that of Ilva, or Elva, renowned for its mines from a period beyond the reach of history. Pliny gives it a circuit of 100 miles; late geographers allow only 60 to its circ. The difference might be accounted for by the encroachments of the sea, and by the tumbling in of rocks, which are in many places of a mouldering texture. Being extremely mountainous, Elba affords but scanty room for cultivation, and produces little more than 6 months' provision of corn for its inhabitants. The climate is much milder than that of the adjacent continent. Elba contains two grand ports; Porto Ferraio and Porto Longone, both defended by fortifications and garrisons. Lon. 10. 26. E. Lat. 42. 53. N. Pop. 13,750. Sq. m. 153. Elba is rendered famous as the residence of Napoleon Bonaparte, during his first exile from France, from May 1814, to February 26, 1815, when he sailed on his fatal expedition to France.

Elephantina, or El Sag, small island on the Nile, opposite to Syene; remarkable for the ruins with which it is covered. The northern part is low, the southern elevated and rocky. The Nile for nearly a mile above is interrupted by numerous small rocks of that fine red granite, which characterises this island, and which produced so many portals, columns, and obelisks, to adorn the chief cities of antiquity. The island is covered with ruins, piled upon each other, Egyptian, Roman, Saracen, and Arabic; of these the Egyptian, though the most ancient, are in the best state of preservation. It is supposed that there was once a great temple here, dedicated to the god Cnuphis, all traces of which are now obliterated, but there remains a pyramidal portal of red granite, supposed to have formed the entrance. There are 2 small temples, one of which is believed by Denon to belong to the earliest ages of Egypt. It is covered within and without with hieroglyphics, executed in a style of peculiar excellence. On the eastern side of the island are remains of a high wall, of which the masonry is admirable.

The population of England and Wales, at several past periods, has been computed as follows:

In 1700.	1750.	1770.	1790.
5,475,000.	6,467,000.	7,428,000	8,675,000.

Religion. The established religion is episcopacy, comprising 2 archbishops, of Canterbury and York, and 24 bishops, who have the privilege of a seat in the house of Lords; and a bishop of Sodor and Man, not possessed of this privilege. The king is considered the supreme head of the church. The archbishop of Canterbury is styled the primate of all England, and takes precedence of all persons, except the royal family. His province includes 21 bishoprics, Bangor, Bath and Wells, Bristol, Chichester, Ely, Exeter, Gloucester, Hereford, Landaff, Lichfield and Coventry, Lincoln, London, Norwich, Oxford, Peterborough, Rochester, St. Asaph, St. David's, Salisbury, Winchester, and Worcester. The province of York includes 4 bishoprics, Durham, Carlisle, Chester, and the Isle of Man. Among the bishops, the bishop of London holds the 1st rank, Durham the 2d, and Winchester the 3d. The rest rank according to the seniority of their consecration. The revenue of the bishop of Durham is reckoned the largest, and is supposed to amount, annually, to about £20,000 sterling. The amount of the revenues of the two archbishops, and the bishops of London and Winchester, is probably next to that of Durham. To every cathedral belong several prebendaries and a dean, who form the dean and chapter. The next order is that of archdeacons, who are about 60 in number. The parochial clergy, who are the most numerous, as well as most laborious order, are the deacons, curates, vicars, and rectors. These, in 1811, amounted to 10,434; of whom, 5,397 were residents, and 5,037 were non-residents. The number of churches belonging to the establishment, in 1818, was 10,192; chapels, 1,551; total, 11,741. The income of the clergy is principally derived from tithes; annual amount about £3,000,000. The average annual income of the parochial clergy does not exceed £100.

The dissenters from the establishment are very numerous, comprising Presbyterians, Independents, Catholics, Methodists, Baptists, Quakers, Unitarians, and Swedenborgians;—there are also some Jews. The Catholics amount to about 500,000, and have 900 chapels. The Methodists in Great Britain, in 1821, amounted to 260,345.

Education. Education among the higher classes is much attended to, but neglected among the lower, till the institution of Sunday and Lancasterian schools. There are two universities, Oxford and Cambridge, the most richly endowed of any in Europe. The most celebrated public schools are those of Eton, Westminster, St. Paul's, Harrow, and Rugby. There is a college near Hertford, and military academies at Woolwich and Sandhurst.

Towns. Some of the commercial ports are London, Liverpool, Bristol, Hull, Newcastle, Whitby, Whitehaven, Sunderland, and Yarmouth; naval stations, Portsmouth, Plymouth, Woolwich, and Chatham; manufacturing towns, Manchester, Birmingham, Leeds, Wakefield, Norwich, Sheffield, Leicester, Nottingham, Coventry, and Wolverhampton. Some of the principal watering places are Bath, Cheltenham, Tunbridge, and Harrowgate. Brighton, Ramsgate, Scarborough, Margate, and Swansea are places of fashionable resort in summer.

Rivers. The principal rivers are the Thames, Severn, Trent, Medway, Mersey, Ouse, Tyne, Tees, Were, Dee, Avon, Eden, and Derwent.

Canals. England is remarkable for the number and extent of her canals. See Canals.

Face of the country. The face of the country is beautifully diversified with hills and verdant plains. Wales is mountainous, and the northern counties of England somewhat so. Snowdon, in Wales, is the highest mountain.

Soil and productions. The soil is various, but a large proportion of it is very good, and it is under excellent cultivation. The principal productions are wheat, barley, oats, rye, buckwheat, beans, and peas.

Climate. The climate is healthy, though uncertain, and liable to frequent and sudden changes. It is inclined to cold and damp, but the extremes of heat and cold are much less than in most other countries in the same parallel of latitude. In most parts of England the thermometer rarely rises higher than 82 deg. in summer, or falls below 15 deg. in winter.

Minerals. The mineral productions are very valuable, consisting of coal, iron, tin, lead, copper, marble, rock salt, &c.

Manufactures. England is famous for the extent and excellence of her manufactures; consisting of woollens, cotton, silk, hardware, earthenware, and glass, also leather, paper, &c. The total annual value was estimated, in 1801, at £63,000,000.

Commerce. The commerce of England exceeds that of every other country. It consists chiefly in the exchange of her manufactures for the raw produce of other parts of the world. The following is an official statement of the annual value of the exports and imports of England at several periods.

Years.	Imports.	Exports.
1719	£5,367,499.....	£6,834,716.
1749	7,917,804.....	12,678,758.
1779	10,762,240.....	12,352,052.
1799	24,483,841.....	31,723,727.
1809	27,142,541.....	45,918,663.
1814	24,362,124.....	37,647,874.

ENGLAND, (New,) country, N. A., forming NE. part of the U. S.; bounded N. by Canada, E. by New Brunswick and the Atlantic, S. by the Atlantic and Long Island sound, and W. by New York. It comprises the states of Maine, Vermont, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and Connecticut. Lon. 66. 49. to 73. 15. W. Lat. 41. to 48. 12. N. Pop. in 1810, 1,271,974; in 1820, 1,659,793.

The face of the country is generally uneven, and agreeably diversified. A part of it is mountainous. The soil is various, from barren sand to the richest clays and loams. It is generally better fitted for grazing than tillage. The most important production is grass. Beef, mutton, pork, butter, and cheese are abundant. Indian corn, rye, wheat, barley, and oats are extensively cultivated. This is the most populous part of the United States. The inhabitants are mostly of English descent; there is no country in the world where education is so generally diffused among all classes of people.

Ephesus, v. A. Turkey, in Natolia, on the Cayster; 35 S. Smyrna. Lon. 27. 37. E. Lat. 37. 50. N. This was anciently one of the most splendid cities of Asia Minor, and the metropolis of all Asia. Stephanus gives it the title of Epiphanestate, i. e. Most Illustrious; Pliny styles it the ornament of Asia; and Strabo, the greatest and most frequented emporium of that continent. But the chief ornament of Ephesus was the so much celebrated temple of Diana, built at the common charge of all the states in Asia; and for its structure, size, and furniture, accounted one of the 7 wonders of the world. 220 years (Pliny says 400) were spent in building this wonderful temple, by all Asia. It was 425 feet in length, and 200 in breadth, supported by 127 marble pillars 70 feet high, of which 77 were most curiously carved, and the rest polished. Each pillar, with its base, was calculated to contain 150 tons of Parian marble. These pillars were the works of so many kings, and the bas-reliefs of one were done by Scopas, the most famous sculptor of antiquity; the altar was almost wholly the work of Praxiteles. This celebrated edifice was destroyed during the invasion of the Goths A. D. 260. The splendid remains of magnificent works with which this famous city was once adorned, now lie scattered about and attest its former grandeur.—When Tournefort visited Ephesus about 1700, he found there 30 or 40 Greek families; but in 1820, it was visited by Mr. Fisk, and not a single human being was found to live in the place. Persia, about 200 leagues in length, and 60 in breadth; bounded N. by Georgia, E. by Schirvan and a small province called Mougan, S. by Adirbeitzan, and W. by Turkish Armenia. The principal towns are Erivan and Nachsivan.

Erivan, or Irvan, or Irvan, city, Asia, and capital of Greater Armenia, or Erivan. Lon. 44. 35. E. Lat. 40. 20. N. Pop. 15,000. It is situated in a plain, surrounded with mountains, on the river Tergui, which flows into the Oraxes, 3 leagues below. It is large, dirty, and ill built, and but indifferently peopled; the ramparts are of earth; the fortress is encompassed with a wall of bricks, in which is a palace for the governor, and 800 houses, inhabited only by Persians; the Armenians have shops there, but must not remain during the night. The churches are small, and half buried in the ground, resembling catacombs. In the town and environs they reckon 28 convents for the devotees of both sexes, but they are poorly endowed. The lake of Erivan, called by the Persians Daria Shevin, is 3 days march from the town, and is 100 miles in circ.

Erzerum, or Arzerum, or Arz-roum, (an. Arze,) city & cap. Turkish Armenia, or Tarcomania, & also of a pachalic to which it gives name; 250 NNE. Aleppo, 510 E. by S. Constantinople. Lon. 40. 57. E. Lat. 39. 58. N. Pop. according to Hassel, Cannabich, Malte-Brun, &c., only 25,000; according to the Edin. Gaz., 100, or 130,000. Mr. Morier, who visited this city in 1808, gives the following estimate: Turkish families, 50,000; Armenian, 4, or 5,000; Greek, 100. Persians living in a caravansary, about 1,000. Mr. Morier mentions, that from the original estimate he deducted more than one-third of the number of Turkish families; but the reduced statement, at the rate of 5 persons to a family, makes the Turkish population amount to 250,000. Arminian abp. and Greek bp. see.

Erzerum is situated near the head of the Euphrates, on a rising ground, at the base of a chain of mountains, which are usually covered with snow. The climate is healthy, but the cold in winter intense. It is surrounded by a double stone wall, with 4 gates. It is well built; the houses generally of stone, with rafters of wood, and terraced, having grass growing on the tops, and sheep and calves feeding there, so that, when seen from a distance, the roofs of the houses can hardly be distinguished from the plain at their foundation. The streets are mostly paved, and the bazars are spacious and well stocked, and the place exhibits an appearance of much industry. It contains about 100 mosques, 1 Greek and 2 Armenian churches, and 16 baths. It has considerable manufactures, and an extensive trade in copper and articles from Persia and countries NW. of Hindoostan.—It is a very ancient town; the inhabitants date its foundation from the time of Noah.—Pop. of the pachalic, according to Hassel, 300,000. Sq. m. 21,400.

Erzgebirg, circle, Saxony, surrounded by Leipsic, Meissen, Vogtlandt, Neustadt, and Bohemia. It owes its name to its mines of iron, copper, tin, lead, cobalt, bismuth, and arsenic; the yearly produce computed at about £300,000 or £400,000 sterling; the number of miners, 12,000. The soil is hard and stubborn, the air cold, and the corn which is sown not unfrequently destroyed by the severity of the weather. Sq. m. 2,153. Pop. 459,464. Towns, 52. Villages, 594. Chief towns, Freyberg, the capital, Chemnitz, and Zwickau.

Erzgebirg, (i. e. Metalliferous Mountains,) chain of mountains running between Saxony and Bohemia, till they meet the Riesengebirge on the frontiers of Silesia. The highest summits, which are on the side of Saxony, sometimes rise to 3,800 or 3,900 feet above the level of the sea.

Escorial, v. Spain, in New Castile, on the Guadara; 12 NW. Madrid. Lon. 4. 8. W. Lat. 40. 36. N. Pop. 2,453. It takes its name from the celebrated palace or convent, which is said to contain 11,000 windows, 14,000 doors, and 800 pillars, and to have cost 6,000,000 crowns. It is furnished with some capital paintings, by the best masters, and a library, which is said to contain 130,000 volumes, of which 4,300 are MSS. It was begun in the year 1563. At the first sight of the Escorial, it conveys the idea of a square quarry of stone above ground; for it is the largest, though not the most elegant palace in Europe, and is esteemed by the Spaniards the 8th wonder of the world. It was built by Philip II. in commemoration of the victory of St. Quentin, gained over the French on the day of St. Lorenzo, the Spanish saint, for whom it is named, and is built in the strange form of a gridiron, in allusion to the manner of his death. The Doric architecture prevails in it; it is wholly built of grey stone, called beroque-na, resembling a kind of granite, though not so hard. It is situated in a dry soil, among barren mountains; the breadth of 657 feet; the sides are 494 feet in depth. There is a square tower at each end of the four corners, said to be 200 feet in height. The chief front, which has 35 windows in breadth, is turned towards the mountains, which are only 100 paces distant. The church is built with a cupola, after the model of St. Peter's at Rome, and on each side is a tower with chimes. Behind the choir is an altar, over which is a representation, as large as life, of Christ on the cross; the body is of white, the cross of black marble. This is thought to be the finest crucifix extant.

Etna, or Ætna, called by the people in its vicinity Monte Gibello, volcanic mountain, Sicily, in Val de Demona, celebrated from the remotest antiquity for its magnitude and eruptions. Its elevation above the sea is nearly 11,000 feet; according to Ferrara 10,942; Shucksburg 10,954; Saussure 10,963. Brydone and Buffon state it at 12,000. In a clear day it may be distinctly seen from Valetta, the capital of Malta, 150 miles distant. The distance from Catania to the summit is 30 miles. The number of eruptions on record, is 32, of which not more than 10 issued from the highest crater. The first recorded is mentioned by Diodorus Siculus; the second happened 783 before Christ; the last of the 32 happened in 1811. Those of 1669 and 1755 were particularly destructive. That of 1669 was the most formidable on record, and it is said that the stream of lava in 40 days, destroyed the habitations of 27,000 persons. According to Recupero, stones of immense size have sometimes been thrown upwards 7,000 feet; and they are frequently thrown to the distance of 30 miles.

The circumference of its base is stated at 180 miles. From the base it rises like a pyramid to the perpendicular height of 2 miles, by an acclivity nearly equal on all sides, forming with the horizon an angle of about 15 degrees, which becomes greater on approaching the summit. The crater is upwards of 2 miles in circ., and presents the appearance of an inverted cone. The mountain contains an epitome of the different climates throughout the globe, presenting at once all the seasons of the year and the varieties of produce. It is accordingly divided into 3 distinct zones or regions, which may be distinguished as the torrid, temperate, and frigid, but which are known by the names of the cultivated region, the woody or temperate region, and the frigid or desert region.

In ascending the mountain from Catania about 15 miles are allotted for the first zone, or cultivated region. In this part, pasture, cornfields, vineyards, and fruit trees of almost every description, are extremely abundant; and here are said to be no less than 77 towns and villages, and numerous monasteries; and the population spread over the surface is estimated at 100, or 120,000. In succeeding to the woody or temperate region the scene changes; instead of suffocating heat, the air becomes mild and fresh; the surface and soil have great inequality, covered with a variety of trees, but decreasing in size towards the upper zone. In the woody region is a famous chesnut tree, which according to Swinburne, is 196 feet in circ. In the upper zone, vegetation entirely disappears, and the surface presents a dreary expanse of snow and ice. The upper part is steeper than the rest, and may be called the cone of Etna; being in a right line, upwards of a mile in ascent, and about $\frac{1}{4}$ mile in perpendicular height. The summit presents a prospect of unrivalled beauty and grandeur, embracing a wide extent of sea and land.

Exeter, r. N. H., which rises from a small pond in Sandown, and pursues generally an easterly course till it meets the tide at Exeter; it afterwards pursues a northeasterly course, and communicates with the Piscataqua through Great bay. The Indian name from Exeter to the entrance into the Piscataqua is Swamscot.

Exeter, (Indian name Swamscot,) p-t. Rockingham co. N. H.; 14 SW. by W. Portsmouth, 15 NNW. Newburyport, 18 NNE. Haverhill, 40 SE. by E. Concord, 47 N. by E. Boston, W. 489. Pop. in 1810, 1,759; in 1820, 2,114. It is pleasantly situated at the head of tide water and of navigation on Exeter river, and is one of the most considerable towns in the state, and was formerly the seat of government. It contains a court-house, a jail, a bank, an academy, a printing office, and 3 houses of public worship, 2 for Congregationalists, and 1 for Baptists. It is favorably situated for a manufacturing town, and contains a woollen manufactory, 2 cotton manufactories, a manufactory of ordnance and small arms, a paper mill, 2 oil mills, and many other valuable mills. It has also extensive manufactures of saddles, chaises, shoes, morocco, combs, tin ware, &c.

Phillips Exeter academy, in this town, was founded by the Hon. John Phillips, L.L.D. in 1781. It is one of the oldest, best endowed, and most respectable institutions of the kind in the United States. It has a principal, a professor of mathematics and natural philosophy, an assistant, about 80 students, a library of about 600 volumes, and a handsome philosophical apparatus. The building is an elegant edifice, 76 feet by 36, 2 stories high. The institution comprises two departments, one of languages, and the other of English studies, and in each department there are three classes. The department of languages is designed chiefly for those who are preparing for college: the English department embraces an extensive course of English education, in Arithmetic, English grammar, mathematics, history, belles lettres, natural and moral philosophy, and astronomy.

Exeter, city, Eng., capital of Devonshire; 78 SW. Bath, 78 SW. Bristol, 173 WSW. London. Lon. 3. 34. W. Lat. 50. 44. N. Pop. 18,896. Bp. see. It is situated on the river Ex, about 10 miles from the English channel; Ptolemy calls it Isca; and Antoninus Isca Danmoniorum: the Saxons call it Exceancester, Exeasters, or Excester. In modern Latinity, it is called Exonia, whence the word Exon. It was surrounded with walls, and had 6 gates, most of which are pulled down. Besides the cathedral, which is a magnificent pile of building, there are 18 other churches, a few chapels, and 5 large meeting-houses. The other principal public buildings are the guildhall and public hospital. Exeter has considerable trade in coarse woollen manufactures, though less than formerly; 3 markets, on Tuesday, Friday, and Saturday; and sends 2 members to parliament. The mildness of the climate and cheapness of provisions have latterly induced many families to resort to Exeter for health and the education of their children. During the late war it became, in a considerable degree, a substitute for the interdicted residences of Montpellier, Nice, and Naples.

Faroe Islands, islands in the North sea, belonging to Denmark, under the same governor with Iceland, about 170 leagues S. Iceland, but something more to the W. of Norway, and are 25 in number; though but 17 are inhabited. The principal ones are Stromoe, Norderoe, Asteroe, Suderoe, and Sandoe. They extend about 70 miles in length, and 50 in breadth. When the day is at its greatest length in these islands, the sun rises at 7 minutes after two, and sets 53 minutes after nine. The summers and winters are very moderate in this climate; and as the latter are neither long nor severe, the cattle feed here in the open air all the year round. These islands are, indeed, so many solid rocks, but the surface of them is covered with earth, or mould, to the depth of two feet, and this shallow soil is so fertile as to yield 20 for one. The pastures are excellent, especially for sheep, in the great flocks of which the wealth of the inhabitants consists. There are 7 parishes, and 39 churches, under the diocese of Zealand. Charleston, W. 348. Lon. 97. 6. W. Lat. 34. 2. N. Pop. in 1800, 1,656; in 1820, 3,532. It is the most commercial town in N. C., and has a pleasant and advantageous situation, nearly a mile from Cape Fear river. The Cape Fear Company have lately cleared the river of logs and sand shoals in order to render it navigable for steam boats; and have constructed a canal from the river through the town, so that boats may lie along by the side of the warehouses. It contains a court house, a town house, an academy, a masonic hall, 3 banks, one of which is a branch of the U. S. bank, and 3 houses of public worship. Several of the public buildings are large and elegant. The town is regularly laid out, and the principal streets are 100 feet wide. Two weekly newspapers are published here. Great quantities of produce, consisting of cotton, tobacco, flour, wheat, flaxseed, corn, hemp, naval stores, &c. are collected here and conveyed in boats down the river to Wilmington. The situation of the town is healthful, and favourable for trade and manufactures. The land around is considerably elevated, and the soil dry and barren, except on the water courses, where it is rich.

Egypt, situated on W. side of the Nile, extending from the river to the Burket el Kerun: formerly the province of Arsinoë, and intersected by canals cut by the ancient Egyptians, and then forming a communication between the river and the lake. Fayoum, formerly one of the wealthiest and most fertile provinces of Egypt, is much declined in its fertility, through the oppression of the Turks; instead of flourishing cities, only mud-wall villages are found. The grain most cultivated is doura or durra. Other productions are wheat, rye, barley, flax, cotton, dates, and sugar. Rose bushes are extensively cultivated.

Fayoum, or Feium, t. Egypt, and capital of the province so called; 49 SSW. Cairo. Lon. 30. 39. E. Lat. 29. 27. N. It formerly contained public baths, markets, and colleges; divided by the canal of Joseph, and surrounded by gardens. At present it is only $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile in circ., and stands on the eastern shore of the canal. The remainder is destroyed, and the colleges are no more. It has 60 looms for woollen, nearly as many for cotton, and about 30 distilleries of rose water. The houses, built of sun-dried bricks, are a gloomy assemblage of huts.

Fernandez, or Juan Fernandez, isl. in the S. P. ocean, about 110 leagues W. of Chili; about 4 leagues long, and hardly 2 wide, of an irregular shape. Lon. 78. 52. W. Lat. 33. 40. S. It is noted for the refreshments it has afforded to navigators from its wild goats, vegetables, and water. The governor of the island is appointed by the president of Chili.—Alexander Selkirk, a Scotch sailor, being left on this isl. and by his captain, lived here from the year 1706 to 1709, in solitude. This circumstance gave rise to the celebrated romance of Robinson Crusoe, by De Foe.

Fernandina, s-p. Amelia island. It is the only town on the island.

Fernandino, p-t. St. John's co. East Florida; W. 799.

Fernando de Noronha, or Naronho, isl. in the Atlantic, full of mountains, which have the appearance of volcanoes, but covered with verdure; not above 3 miles in length, and in shape resembling a laurel leaf; about 210 miles from the coast of Brazil. Lon. 32. 38. W. Lat. 3. 56. S. It is defended with forts; the water is in general brackish, and sometimes no rain falls for three or four years together. It is a place of banishment for male criminals; no females are permitted to visit the island. The garrison, consisting of about 120 men, is relieved yearly.

Fernando Po, or Fernand Pao, isl. Africa, in the Atlantic, near the coast of Benin, about 60 miles in circ. The land lies high, and the soil is fertile in manioc, sugar-canes, rice, fruit, and tobacco; the inhabitants are rude and uncivilized. Lon. 8. 40. E. Lat. 3. 28. N. Pop. 1,200.

Ferrara, (an. Forum Allieni), city, Italy, States of the Church, capital of a delegation of the same name, on a branch of the Po; 40 SE. Mantua, 67 N. Bologna. Lon. 11. 36. E. Lat. 44. 50. N. Pop. 23,638. H. 3,500. Abp. see. It is about 4 miles in circ., and defended by a citadel, strong walls, and bastions. The streets are handsome, with many magnificent palaces and beautiful churches. The cathedral is remarkable for its antiquity. It contains 100 churches, and 38 convents. The environs are marshy, and the air unwholesome, consequently thinly inhabited. Ariosto lies buried in a Benedictine convent; and in the hospital of St. Ann, belonging to the city, Tasso was confined as an idiot. Here is a university, founded in the year 1390 by Albert marquis of Ferrara, which has 22 professorships. The pope has a legate at Ferrara, who resides in a palace situated in the midst of the town, surrounded with walls, flanked with towers and ditches.—Natives, Bentevoglio, Giraldis, and Guarini.

Ferrarese, or delegation of Ferrara, bounded N. by the Po, E. by the gulf of Venice, S. by the Romagna and Bolognese, and W. by Modena. The whole country is low and marshy, being frequently overflowed by several branches of the Po, and other rivers which run through it, so that travelling is sometimes dangerous without guides. It contains but few towns, and though in itself fertile, is badly cultivated and thinly inhabited. The principal places are Ferrara and Comachio. Pop. 170,727. Sq. m. 1,187.

Ferratus Mons, now Jurjura.

Ferre-anah, t. Africa, in Tunis; 65 SSW. Keff, 130 SW. Tunis. It is supposed to be on the site of ancient Thala, or Teleple. According to Dr. Shaw, it appears to have been the largest city of Bizacium, notwithstanding the remains of its ancient grandeur consist in a few granite and other pillars. It has good air, and is well supplied with water, but is situated in a desert, the country around being entirely barren and arid.

Ferro, or Hiero, one of the Canary islands, and with regard to situation the most westerly; about 15 miles in breadth, and 40 in circ.; 300 S. Madeira. Lon. of W. point, 18. 10. W. Lat. 27. 45. N. It rises steep and craggy from the sea on all sides for above a league, in such a manner as to render the ascent very difficult and fatiguing: after this the rest of the islands will be found to be tolerably level and fruitful, and it abounds with many kinds of trees and shrubs, but no gum-dragon trees grow here. It produces better grass, herbs, and flowers than any of the other islands, so that bees thrive and multiply here extremely, and make excellent honey. Pop. 5,000. English and French geographers formerly took their first meridian from the west extremity of this island; but Englishmen now generally take their longitude from London or Greenwich, and Frenchmen theirs from Paris.

Ferrogan, mt. Scot., Perthshire; 18 S. Blair Athol.

Ferrol, s-p. Spain, in Galicia, situated in the bay of Corunna, with a good harbour, and strongly fortified; 21 NE. Corunna, 36 NW. Lugo. Lon. 8. 15. W. Lat. 43. 29. N. Pop. about 10,000 in peace, in war much more. This place is now the first marine arsenal in the kingdom. The site of this port renders it extremely strong; as to approach it by sea, it is necessary to pass a river, no where above 500 yards broad, defended by several forts. The basin wherein the ships are laid up, which may be about 1,500 yards long, and between five and six broad, is a magnificent work.

Fez, (part of ancient Mauritania,) country, Africa, formerly a kingdom of great extent, now a province of Morocco; bounded N. by the straits of Gibraltar and the Mediterranean, E. by Algiers, S. by Morocco, and W. by the Atlantic. It is divided into 9 provinces or districts, Shavoya, Temsena, Fez, Beni-hassen, Garb, Shaus, Rif, Tedla, and Garet; the whole united to the empire of Morocco. The principal towns are Fez, the capital, Mequinez, Melilla, Ceuta, Tangier, Larache, Mamora, and Salee. Sq. m. about 89,000. The soil is fertile, producing, in the greatest abundance, corn, fruit, flax, salt, gum, wax, &c. Oranges, lemons, figs, and olives, every where abound. The Moors, however, are but bad farmers, and cultivate only in proportion to their wants, so that two-thirds of the country lie waste.

Fez, or Fas, city, Morocco, capital of the country of Fez; 160 S. Gibraltar, 200 NNE. Morocco. Lon. 5. 20. W. Lat. 33. 50. N. Pop. according to Ali Bey about 100,000; Jews 2,000. Pop. according to the improbable statement of Jackson, 380,000. It was built in 793 by Edris, and soon became a large city, and the capital of the western Mahometan states. According to Leo Africanus it contained, in the 12th century, 700 temples and mosques, of which 50 were magnificent, and adorned with marble pillars. It was esteemed a sacred city, and when the road to Mecca was shut up in the 4th century of the Hegira, the western Mahometans made pilgrimages to Fez, and the eastern to Jerusalem. It was also famous as a school of learning, at a time when knowledge was almost exclusively possessed by the Saracens. Its numerous schools of philosophy, physic, and astronomy, were not only resorted to by all the Mahometan kingdoms of Spain and Africa, but were attended by Christians.

The situation of Fez is singular. It lies in a valley which is formed by surrounding hills into a species of funnel, the higher parts of which are covered with trees, orange groves, and orchards. A river winds through the valley, refreshing the fields, supplying the city with water, and turning various machinery. The gardens around it form a delightful amphitheatre. On a height above the rest of the city, stands New Fez, founded in the 13th century; a well built town, inhabited chiefly by Jews.—The principal edifice is the mosque of Carubin, described by Leo as $1\frac{1}{2}$ m. in circ.; but Europeans are not permitted to see it.—Fez contains 200 caravanseries or inns, 2 or 3 stories high. The hospitals, once numerous, are in a great measure fallen to decay. The shops make a handsome appearance, and the markets are immensely crowded. Here are still some remains of those learned institutions for which the city was once distinguished. Fez is said now to exhibit a singular mixture of splendour and ruin.—In 1799, 65,000 of the inhabitants were said to be carried off by the plague.

Feza, see Pasa.

Fezzan, (an. Phazania,) country, Africa, situated to the S. of Tripoli, E. of the Great Desert, and 60 days' journey W. of Cairo. Mr. Horneman, a late traveller, informs us, that the greatest length, of the cultivated part of this country, is about 300 English miles from N. to S., and the greatest width 200 miles from E. to W.; but the mountainous region of Harutsch to the east and other deserts to the south and west, are reckoned within this territory. The borders on the N. are Arabs, nominally dependent on Tripoli. Fezzan, is bounded E. by the Harutsch and line of deserts; S. and SE. by the country of the Tibboos, SW. by that of the nomadic Tuaricks; W. are Arabs. The kingdom contains 101 towns and villages, of which Mourzouk is the capital. The principal towns next in order to the imperial residence are Sockna, Sebba, Hun, Wadon to the N., Gatron (or Kattron) to the S., Jerma to the W., and Zuela to the E. The climate is at no season temperate or agreeable. During the summer the heat is intense, and when the wind blows from the south, is scarcely supportable, even by the natives. The soil is light and sandy, and produces maize, barley, pompions, carrots, cucumbers, onions, garlick, and some wheat. The most common trees are the date, white thorn, and the talke. Here is little or no rain, but the vegetation is luxuriant from the number of subterraneous springs. The population of Fezzan is loosely estimated from 75, to 150,000, all of whom, without exception, profess the Mahometan religion.

Filabres, mt. Spain, in Grenada; 9 miles from Almeria. This amazing and stupendous mountain is a solid block of white marble, about a league in circuit, and 2,000 feet high, without the least mixture of any other stone or earth, the marble appearing in many places where neither the wind, rain, or any of those causes which destroy the hardest rocks, have yet made the least impression. From the mountain a great part of the kingdom of Grenada is discovered, which is mountainous, and resembles the waves of the sea in a storm. On the other side the mountain is cut almost perpendicularly, and from its prodigious elevation affords a most awful prospect, with the city of Gandia, which, though at a distance, considered with a bird's-eye view, seems only half a league off.

FINLAND, or Finnland, (an. Finingia) country, Europe, lying east of Sweden, and belonging chiefly to that country, till 1808, when it was ceded to Russia; of the small part previously possessed by Russia, Viborg was the capital. The Swedish part was divided into 8 provinces, Finland Proper, Åland, East Bothnia, Wasa, Tavastland, Nyland, Savolax, and Kymmenegards-Lehn. The whole now forms the Russian government of Finland, and is bounded N. by Lapland, E. by the governments of Archangel and Olonetz, S. by the gulf of Finland, and W. by the gulf of Bothnia. It is divided into 13 circles. Helsingfors is the capital. Åbo, the capital till 1819, is the largest town. The other principal towns are Viborg, Nystadt, Uleaborg, Wasa, Bioneborg, Tornea, Kuopio, and Tavasthus.—Pop. of Swedish Finland, in 1749, 408,839; in 1790, 705,623; in 1815, 902,210; of Russian Finland, in 1815, 193,747; total, 1,095,957; in 1820, 1,115,000. Sq. m. 89,520.

The climate in the south and west is comparatively temperate; in the north and east the cold is intense and of long continuance.—A considerable portion of the interior is covered by lakes. In the most favoured districts, rice, oats and barley are successfully cultivated; also some wheat; the pasturage is extensive and good; the exports are tar, pitch, wood, iron, and copper. The roads are bad.—The religion is Lutheran. The language differs both from the Swedish and Russian, and is spoken also in Lapland, Esthonia, and part of Livonia.

Cotton-Port, the nearest point of navigation on the Tombigbee, 85 W. Huntsville, 250 N. by W. Cahawba, W. 845. Pop. 500. It was laid out in 1818. It has a pleasant site, elevated 120 feet above the surface of the river. The streets are 100 feet wide, and intersect each other at right angles. It is advantageously situated, well built, and flourishing. With a little improvement, the river may be rendered navigable to this place for steam boats, at all seasons when they can enter the Tennessee. At present they get up to the town only at moderate swells, but never go higher. The great military road and mail route from N. Orleans to the northeast, pass through this place.

Florence, (an. Florentia), city, Italy, capital of the grand duchy of Tuscany, and of a province of the same name, on the Arno, at the foot of the Apennines; 45 ENE. Leghorn, its port; 50 S. Bologna, 125 NNW. Rome. Lon. 11. 16. E. Lat. 43. 47. N. Pop. 75,205. H. 10,000. Abp. see. It is one of the finest cities in Italy, or even in Europe; situated in a delightful valley intersected by the Arno, occupying both sides of the river, which is crossed by 4 bridges. The environs are celebrated for beautiful scenery. Behind the city rise hills covered with olive and fig trees and other fruit trees; still farther are mountains clothed with immense forests of chestnut trees, and adorned with small towns; while beyond rise the naked and lofty summits of the Apennines. The whole valley is one continued grove and garden, where the beauty of the country is enlivened by the animation of the town, and the fertility of the soil is redoubled by the industry of the cultivators.

The city is surrounded by a wall, has 2 citadels, is about 5 miles in circuit, of an oval form; its streets tolerably wide and well paved, or rather flagged; the houses in general solid and rather stately; several of the palaces and churches are magnificent. The palace of the grand duke is a vast building of freestone, containing 900 apartments. The cathedral, built in the 15th century, is a Gothic edifice of vast extent and magnificence, and in boldness and skill inferior only to St. Peter's of Rome; 426 feet in length, and 363 in height. It is completely cased with polished black and white marble. The Medicean gallery, a grand collection of works of art, known throughout Europe as the gallery of Florence, is more than 500 feet in length, and is replenished with busts, statues, and paintings. The last are so arranged as to exhibit the progress of the art from the 11th to the 17th century.

The university dates from 1438. Of the libraries of the city, the Magliabechiana is the largest and contains 90,000 volumes, and 3,000 MSS. The Marcelliana has 40,000 vols. The academy of fine arts, at present the most celebrated school of painting in the world, had, in 1819, 361 students. The Accademia Fiorentina was instituted in 1542, for making translations from Greek and Latin classics. The celebrated society, styled Accademia della Crusca, was instituted to improve the language, the design being to throw out, like bran, all words which were not good Tuscan. The two were united some time since, and now bear the name of the Florentine Academy. The city is said to contain 173 churches, 39 convents, 12 hospitals, an extensive museum of natural history, and a botanic garden.—Florence was a place of great trade from the 13th to the 15th century. Its manufactures consist of satin, taffetas, damask, straw hats, jewellery, and precious stones.—Natives, Leo X, Macchiavel, Dante, Magliabechi, Guicciardini, Giotto, and Americus Vesputius.—Pop. of the province of Florence 584,475.

FLORIDA, country, belonging to the U. S., bounded N. by Alabama and Georgia, E. by the Atlantic, S. and W. by the gulf of Mexico. The northern part of the western boundary is formed by the Perdido, which separates it from Alabama. Florida formerly extended as far west as the Mississippi, the northern boundary being formed by St. Mary's river from the ocean to its source, thence by a right line to the point where Flint river unites with the Appalachicola, thence up the Appalachicola to the parallel of Lat. 31. N., thence due west on that parallel to the Mississippi. The part lying between the Mississippi and Pearl is now included in the state of Louisiana; and the part between Pearl river and the Perdido, in the states of Mississippi and Alabama. The part east of the Perdido is under the territorial government of Florida. Lon. 80. 25. to 87. 20. W. Lat. 25. to 31. N. Length from N. to S. about 400 miles, average breadth about 140. Sq. miles about 45,000.

Towns. The principal towns are Pensacola, St. Augustine, New Smyrna, and St. Marks.

Rivers. The most considerable rivers are St. Johns, Appalachicola, Indian river, Suwaney, & Conecuh.—The principal island is Amelia island.

Face of the country. The general aspect on the seashore is flat, sandy, and barren; further inland it is marshy, abounding in natural meadows; a range of low hills extends through the peninsula. The river St. John's, which has a course of upwards of 200 miles, forms a prominent feature of the country. The great swamp Ouaquephenogaw or Okefonoco, nearly 300 miles in circuit, lies on the north side, about half in Florida and half in Georgia. To the south of this are the Alachua savannas, a level and fertile tract, bare of trees and shrubs.

Soil. The lands of Florida in their general character are light and sandy; and they are represented as not capable of sustaining a continual succession of exhausting crops. The lands have been divided into 7 varieties; 1st. pine barrens, which constitute a great part of the country. They produce vast quantities of yellow and pitch pine; also shrubs in great variety, and a wiry grass, which yields sustenance to numerous herds of cattle. In wet seasons, orchards of peach and mulberry trees flourish remarkably well on these lands. 2. Hammock land. This variety, which constitutes the main body of good land, is so called because it rises in mounts or small tufts among the pines. Most of the uplands remote from the sea are of this kind, which is adapted to sugar cane, cotton, indigo, potatoes, and pulse. 3. Prairies. These are of two kinds, one found in the pine barrens, being covered with sand and sterile; the other on high ground, covered with wild grass. 4. Swamps. These are of two kinds, the river and inland swamps; the latter are the most valuable, producing large crops of rice, and in some instances the best cotton, corn, and indigo in the country. 5. Marshes. A part of these are occasionally covered with salt water, and a part with fresh. The fresh water marshes produce an abundance of wild oats. 6. A species of marsh, called galen, consisting of watercourses covered with spongy earth, and trembling like jelly for a considerable distance about the spot impressed. 7. Elevated grounds, covered with large trees of different species.

Productions. Florida abounds in vegetable productions in great variety, of most luxuriant growth. It is remarkable for the majestic appearance of its towering forest trees, and the brilliant colours of its flowering shrubs. The pines, palms, cedars, and chestnuts grow to an extraordinary size and height. The laurels, especially the magnolias, are uncommonly striking objects, rising with erect trunks, to the height of 100 feet, forming towards the head a perfect cone, and having their dark green foliage silvered over with large milk white flowers, frequently 8 or 9 inches in diameter. There are 8 different kinds of oak, among which is the live oak, which after forming a trunk from 10 to 20 feet high, and from 12 to 18 feet in circumference, spreads out its branches, in some instances, 50 paces on every side. The cypress, generally growing in watery places, has large roots like buttresses, rising around its lower extremity, then rearing a stem of 80 or 90 feet, it throws out a flat horizontal top like an umbrella, so that often growing in forests all of an equal height, they present the appearance of a green canopy supported on columns in the air. Many rich fruits, particularly limes, prunes, peaches, grapes, and figs, grow wild in the forests. St. John's river and some of the lakes are bordered with orange groves; and olives are cultivated with success. Some of the most important productions to which the country is well adapted are sugar, coffee, cotton, rice, indigo, tobacco, vines, olives, oranges, and various other tropical fruits.—The population of the country is very small, less now than formerly, & is chiefly confined to the few towns. Cultivation has been extended only to some very small tracts. Of the fertile lands on the St. John's, not more than 300 acres are said to be cultivated. The waters contain various kinds of excellent fish, and they also abound in alligators and other lizards.

Climate. The thermometer in summer usually stands between 84 and 88 deg. of Fahrenheit in the shade; and in July and August frequently rises to 94 deg. The sun is scorching hot at noon; in winter it very rarely freezes, nor is the cold ever so severe as to injure the China orange. From the end of September to the end of June "there is not," says Volney, "perhaps, a finer climate in the world."

Indians. The principal tribe of Indians are the Seminoles. They possess some of the finest districts, but are poor, being bad hunters and worse cultivators. There are, according to the Indian agent, 35 settlements of Indians in Florida, but the whole Indian population does not exceed 5,000.

History. This country was first visited by Sebastian Cabot, a Venetian, in 1497; but was more completely discovered by John Ponce, a Spaniard, who landed here in 1513, in April, and is said to have given it the name of Florida, from the appearance of the country, it being then covered with beautiful flowers. Its conquest was effected by Spain, in 1539. It was ceded to Great Britain, in 1763; recovered by Spain in 1781; and confirmed to her in 1783. In 1763 the country was divided into East and West Florida. It was ceded by Spain to the United States by a treaty signed at Washington, Feb. 22, 1821; and the two parts are now formed into one government.

It is neatly built of white stone, and has two or three good streets; the custom-house is a handsome edifice. It is important for its trade in corn and wool. This town, with many others on the coast, was ruined in 1732, by an earthquake, which has occasioned its being rebuilt with greater neatness and regularity. In summer the air is unwholesome, and all persons that can afford to remove, desert it during the hot months. All the large streets and open squares are undermined with vaults, where corn is buried, and preserved sound from year to year; the orifices are closed up with boards and earth; the sides within faced with stone.

Formosa, isl. in the Chinese sea, separated from Fo-kien, in China, by a strait about 60 miles where narrowest. The island is about 240 miles in length from N. to S., and 60 from E. to W. in its broadest part; but greatly contracted at each extremity. That part of Formosa, which the Chinese possess, presents extensive and fertile plains, watered by a great number of rivulets that fall from the eastern mountains. Its air is pure and wholesome, and the earth produces in abundance corn, rice, and the greater part of other grains. Most of the Indian fruits are found here, such as oranges, bananas, pine-apples, guavas, cocoa-nuts, and part of those of Europe, particularly peaches, apricots, figs, raisins, chesnuts, pomegranates, watermelons, &c. Tobacco, sugar, pepper, camphor, and cinnamon are also common.

The capital of Formosa is Tai-ouan, a name which the Chinese give to the whole island. Between Formosa and the continent are a number of small islands, called Pong-hou by the Chinese, and Piscadores by the Europeans; they form a small archipelago; the principal of which only is inhabited by a Chinese garrison, under the command of a mandarin. FRANCE, country, Europe, bounded NW. by the English channel, NE. by the Netherlands, E. by Germany and Switzerland, SE. by Savoy and Piedmont, S. by the Mediterranean and the Pyrenees, which divide it from Spain, and W. by the bay of Biscay. It lies between Lon. 4. 30. W. and 7. 40. E. and between Lat. 42. 20., and 51. N.; 650 long, from E. to W., 500 broad, from N. to S. It contains, exclusive of Corsica, according to Chaptal, 128,000,000 English acres, equal to 200,000 sq. m.; according to the National Assembly, 26,463 square leagues, 25 leagues to a degree; equal to 204,500 sq. m.; according to Le Sur, 27,490 sq. leagues, equal to 212,442 sq. m.; and according to Malte Brun, including Corsica and other islands in Europe, 215,700. sq. m.

Possessions. The limits of France are nearly the same now as before the revolution. Avignon and Venaissin, which before that event, belonged to the pope, now make a part of it, and Corsica forms one of the departments. The foreign possessions of France are not very important; consisting, in the West Indies, of Guadeloupe, Martinico, and Marie Galante; in S. America, of Cayenne; in Asia, of Pondicherry, Karikal, and Chandernagore; in Africa, of the isle of Bourbon, Goree, and factories at the mouth of the Senegal and in Barbary.

Divisions. Before the revolution France was divided into 32 great provinces; it is now, including Corsica, divided into 86 departments, each department being divided into arrondissements or districts, each arrondissement into cantons, and each canton into communes.—Number of each—Departments, 86; arrondissements, 368; cantons, 2,669; communes, 38,990.

The following table exhibits a view of the provinces and departments, with the population and chief towns.

Total, 30,052,965

The inhabitants, according to their race or descent, are distributed as follows:—

French inhabitants about 25,400,000

German, 2,800,000

Kimri, or Low Breton, 900,000

Italian, 190,000

Basque, 108,000

Number of the different religions in the following proportions:—

Catholics about 26,000,000

Calvinists, 2,300,000

Lutherans, 1,100,000

Jews, 60,000

Quakers, 2,550

Moravians, 2,000

The annual number of births is as 1 to 25; of deaths as 1 to 30; and of marriages, as 1 to 110. Of the births, in 1780, every 47th was illegitimate; every 11th throughout France, and every 3d or 4th in the city of Paris were stated, a few years since, to be illegitimate.—In 1817, births, 944,571, of which 63,591 were out of wedlock; marriages, 205,804; deaths, 742,933. In 1818, births 914,351, males 440,802, females, 414,124; births out of wedlock, 59,425; marriages, 212,987; deaths, 743,642. In 1820, births 990,907; deaths 786,338; excess 203,685.

Government. The government, since 1814, is a limited monarchy, resembling that of Great Britain, but females are excluded from the throne. The responsibility of public measures rests with the ministry. The cabinet consists of a keeper of the seals, the ministers of foreign affairs, of finance, of police, of war, of the navy and colonies, of the home department, and finally of the head of the king's household. The parliament is composed, 1st, of a chamber of peers, consisting of upwards of 200 members, possessing privileges similar to those of the peerage of Great Britain, the dignity being hereditary; 2dly, of a house of commons, or chamber of deputies, elected by the people; whose number cannot be less than 256. No person can be an elector without paying an annual tax of £12, or a deputy without paying £40 a year.

Rivers. The great rivers are the Loire, the Rhone, Garonne, Seine, and the Rhine. Other rivers are the Somme, Adour, Var, Moselle, Isere, Marne, Meuse, &c.

Climate. The climate is generally very fine, warmer, drier, and less changeable than that of England. In the north it resembles that of England; in the south the heat is intense, and crops are often blighted by droughts.

Face of the country. France is mostly an open champaign country, agreeably diversified by hill and dale. In the north it is very level. The mountains are found chiefly towards the eastern and southern parts. The largest are Jura, Vosges, Cevennes, Puy de Dôme, Cantal, Pyrenees, and Alps.

Soil. The soil is generally fertile, yet subject to many inequalities. Large tracts in Brittany, Anjou, and Gascony are unfit for cultivation.

Productions. The productions in the northern half of the kingdom consist of wheat, barley, oats, pulse, and potatoes; in the southern half, of vines, mulberries, olives, and corn, particularly maize. There are mines of iron, lead, copper, and silver.

Religion. The established religion is the Roman Catholic, but all others are tolerated. Before the revolution there were 19 archbishoprics, 121 bishoprics, 34,498 parishes, and 7,774 monasteries, abbeys, and convents. There are now 9 archbishoprics, viz. Paris, Besançon, Lyons, Aix, Toulouse, Bourdeaux, Bourges, Tours, and Rouen; and 41 bishoprics.—The number of the clergy, together with their income, was stated, in 1821, as follows.—

	No.	Francs.
Cardinals,	3	90,000
Archbishops,	9	912,000
Bishops,	41
Catholic clergy, 40,500		22,288,000
Calvinist pastors, 183 }		485,000
Lutheran pastors, 174 }

Education. Before the revolution there were 23 universities in France; in that grand convulsion, education was suspended, but its establishments have since been reinstated in a different form. The lycées, now called royal colleges, are 36 in number. The name of university is now confined to Paris, but the provincial establishments, bearing the name of academies, are constituted like the universities of other countries. These, including Paris, are 26 in number, and belong to the following towns.—

Aix	Cahors	Metz	Pau
Amiens	Clermont	Montpellier	Poitiers
Angers	Dijon	Nancy	Rennes
Besançon	Douay	Nismes	Rouen
Bourdeaux	Grenoble	Orleans	Strasbourg
Bourges	Limoges	Paris	Toulouse
Caen	Lyons

The Protestants have two seminaries for studying divinity, at Strasbourg and Montauban.

Return made in 1815 of the public seminaries and number of pupils throughout France.

	Seminaries. Pupils.
Universities	26	6,329
Lycées or royal colleges	36	9,000
Divinity schools of the 2d class	41	5,233
Secondary schools	368	28,000
Boarding schools	1,255	39,623
Primary schools	22,300	737,379

The French excel in chemistry, mathematics, astronomy, and belles lettres. Literary associations are very numerous, at the head of which stands the Institute in Paris, the most celebrated scientific body in the world. Every provincial town of consequence has its public library, a museum, and in general a society for promoting literature and the arts. There are 273 such libraries in France; of which 193 contain 3,345,287 volumes; of these 1,125,347 are in Paris.

Language. The French language is derived from the Latin. It is esteemed of all languages the most polished, the best adapted to conversation, and the most generally diffused among the nations of Europe.

Army and Navy. The French army under Bonaparte, was composed, in time of peace, of upwards of 400,000, and in time of war of nearly 600,000 effective men; in 1818, of only about 90,000. The navy consisted, in 1817, of 68 vessels of the line, 38 frigates, and 271 corvettes and smaller vessels.

Revenue. The revenue, in 1819, amounted to 891,435,000 francs; the expenditure to 874,595,975 francs.

Trade. The French navigation, since the loss of St. Domingo, is not extensive. The principal commercial ports are Marseilles, Bourdeaux, Nantes, Havre de Grace, St. Maloes, Bayonne, Rochelle, and Rochefort. Brest, Toulon, and Cherburg are the chief naval stations. The exports consist of silks, woollens, linens, wines, brandy, &c. There is very little paper money, almost all the business being transacted in gold and silver.

Manufactures. The French have been long noted for their silks, linen, and woollens. Some of the chief manufacturing towns are Lyons, Rouen, Lille, Valenciennes, Strasburg, Tours, Abbeville, Cambray and Angouleme.

Agriculture. The revolution had the effect of dividing landed property into a multitude of petty possessors. One half of the population is now stated to be composed of landed proprietors, great and small. Sheep are numerous; poultry very abundant; horses in proportion to horned cattle as 1 to 5. The following statement is from La Borde, in 1818.—

Employed in agriculture, . . .	17,500,000
manufatures, . . .	6,200,000
various, . . .	4,000,000
indigent, . . .	800,000
Annual produce of agriculture, £140,000,000
manufatures, 38,000,000

France is computed to contain upwards of 128,000,000 English acres; the following liable to taxation.—

	Acres.	Rents.
Arable land, . . .	56,600,000	£24,007,640
Land in underwood, 12,656,790		2,938,520
Meadow land, . . .	8,612,345	7,390,400
Pasture land, . . .	8,703,703	1,812,800
Vineyards, . . .	4,881,481	3,442,560
Forest lands, . . .	1,135,800	201,520

Total rent of land, £40,864,920

The remainder is either wholly uncultivated, or so little productive, as not to be subject to taxation.

Franch-Comté, or Upper Burgundy, before the revolution a province of France, and anciently a part of the kingdom of Burgundy. Almost one half of the country is level, abounding in grain, wine, pasture, hemp, &c., the rest is mountainous, but breeds excellent cattle, and produces some corn and wine. It is now divided into the three departments of Jura, Doubs, and Upper Saone.

Franconia, p-t. Grafton co. N. H.; 28 NE. Haverhill, W. 538. Pop. 373. There are two manufactories of iron in this town. The New Hampshire Iron Factory Company was incorporated in 1805, and is an extensive establishment. The works are situated in the northwest part of the town, on the S. branch of the Lower Ammonoosuc, and consist of a blast furnace, smelting, when in blast, from 12 to 15 tons of iron in a week, which is run into pig iron, potash kettles, stoves, solid castings, and hollow ware; a steel furnace, an air furnace, a forge capable of manufacturing from 150 to 200 tons of bar iron a year; and a trip hammer shop. The quantity of ore is inexhaustible; it is accounted the richest in the United States, and has yielded in the blast furnace, for 12 weeks, 62 per cent of metal, and one week, 70 per cent.—The Haverhill and Franconia iron works consist of a blast furnace, forge, and trip-hammer shop.

Franconia, one of the late 9 circles, Ger., bounded N. by Meissen and Thuringia, E. by Bohemia, and the Upper Palatinate, S. by Bavaria, and Swabia, and W. by the Lower Palatinate and the electorate of Mentz. It is situated near the centre of Germany, the form inclined to a circle, whose diameter is about 150 miles. In the centre the land is fertile in corn, wine, fruit, &c.; but the frontiers are full of forests and mountains, and little cultivated. The principal river is the Maine. The states which composed this circle were the bishoprics of Wurzburg, Bamberg, and Aichstadt; the principalities of Anspach, Bayreuth, Hohenlohe, and Limburg; and the counties of Schwarzenburg, Wertheim, Erbach, and Henneberg. The inhabitants are Lutherans, who are most numerous, Catholics, Calvinists, some Jews, &c. Sq. m. 11,000. Pop. about 1,500,000.

Frankfort, p-t. & metropolis of Kentucky, in Franklin co., on Kentucky river, 60 miles above its confluence with the Ohio, 22 WNW. Lexington, 52 E. Louisville, W. 565. Lon. 84. 40. W. Lat. 38. 14. N. Pop. in 1810, 1,099; in 1820, 1,679. It contains a state house, a court house, a penitentiary, a jail, a market house, a state bank, an academy, 2 houses of public worship, and 3 printing offices, from each of which is issued a newspaper. The state house is built of rough marble, 86 feet by 54. The town contains several rope walks, 2 bagging manufactories, a tobacco ware house, and powder mills.

The site of the town is a semicircular alluvial plain, 200 feet lower than the ground in its rear. The river which is here 100 yards wide, having bold limestone banks, forms a handsome curve, and waters the southern and western parts of the town. The bottoms on both sides of the river are very broad, and are subject to inundation. For several years after the settlements commenced, the inhabitants were afflicted with bilious complaints; but the low situations have been rendered healthy by draining. Several large brigs have been built here and sent to New Orleans.

Frankfort, p-t. & cap. Franklin co. Illinois.

Frankfort on the Maine, (an. Helenopolis), free city, Germany, in the Upper Rhine, on the Maine, 20 miles above its influx into the Rhine; 20 ENE. Mentz, 50 SE. Cologne, 160 WSW. Leipsic, 160 S. Bremen. Lon. 8. 36. E. Lat. 50. 7. N. Pop. in 1817, 60,000, of whom about 9,000 are Jews. Frankfort is one of the 4 free cities of Germany, and is the permanent seat of the Germanic diet. It is divided by the Maine into 2 parts, Frankfort Proper, much the larger part, on the north bank, and Sachsenhausen on the south; and the two are connected by a stone bridge with 14 arches. The principal streets are wide, and there are 3 spacious squares, which add greatly to the beauty of the town. The best houses are built of red or white stone, and many of them are splendid edifices; but the greater part of the houses are constructed of timber, lath, and plaster, in the antique form, having the upper stories projecting over the lower, but they are kept in good repair, and have a fresh appearance. The city was formerly fortified, but most of its out-works are now converted into gardens and promenades. It contains 9 Catholic churches, 7 Lutheran, 2 Reformed, 2 synagogues, several hospitals, a Lutheran gymnasium with 13 teachers, a Catholic gymnasium with 10 teachers, an anatomical theatre, a botanic garden, and a public library of 100,000 volumes.

Frankfort is one of the principal trading towns in Germany; its commercial activity is aided by the navigation of the Rhine and Maine, and by two great annual fairs in spring and autumn. It was formerly the great mart of German literature, a distinction now given to Leipsic; but it is still the seat of extensive bookselling and printing business. It is a great thorough fare, the principal roads of Germany passing in this direction, and is celebrated for its excellent inns. It was formerly one of the Hanse towns.—The kings of the Franks resided here, likewise the immediate successors of Charlemagne; and the emperors of Germany were elected, and usually crowned here.—Natives, Sclosser, Klinger, and Goethe.

The territory belonging to Frankfort is pleasant, fertile, and well cultivated, and contains several villages and a great number of country seats, having 106 sq. m. and 73,400 inhabitants. The established religion is Lutheran.

Frankfort, gov. Pru., in Brandenburg, divided into 17 circles, viz. Frankfort, Arenswalde, Friedburg, Soldin, Königsberg, Custrin, Landsberg, Sternberg, Züllichau, Crossen, Lebus, Guben, Sorau, Lubben, Luckau, Kalau, Spremberg-Hoyerswerda, and Cotbus. Pop. 524,891. Sq. m. 6,742.

Frankfort on the Oder, t. Pru. Brandenburg, capital of the government and circle of Frankfort, on the Oder; 12 SSW. Custrin, 48 E. Berlin. Lon. 14. 33. E. Lat. 52. 22. N. Pop. 11,969. H. 1,355. It is without walls, but the bridge across the Oder is defended by a fort, and the town is tolerably well built, and has considerable trade, and 3 annual fairs. It is connected with the North sea by Muhldroze canal, and the number of boats and barges employed on the Oder and canal, is stated at 2,000. Frankfort contains 5 Lutheran churches, 1 Reformed, 1 Catholic, 1 synagogue, 3 hospitals, a Lutheran gymnasium, and a Reformed school or college. Here was a Reformed university, founded in 1506, which had, in 1802, 180 students; but several years since it was united with that of Breslau, and the buildings converted into a military magazine.—Native, Albinus.

Friendly Islands, cluster of islands in the S. Pacific ocean, of great extent, and upwards of 150 in number; some of which are large, and some lofty, with volcanoes. The most important are the following, Tonga, Eaoowe, Annamooka, Hapae islands, Mayorga islands, Feejee islands, Vavaoo, and Toofoa. Lon. 184. 46. to 185. 45. E. Lat. 19. 40. to 21. 30. S. They are in general fertile, and well planted with cocoa-nut and bread-fruit trees, plantains, sugar-canes, yams, &c.: fowls are large and good; parrots and paroquets are found of various kinds; pigeons, with plenty of wild ducks and other water-fowl. The inhabitants appeared to Captain Cook, who first discovered these islands in 1773, hospitable and kind, and to be united in a firm alliance, on which account he gave them the name they bear. But the accounts of subsequent visitors, particularly that of Mariner, shews them to be capable of the most ferocious cruelty and to be in the practice of cannibalism. They are a shade darker than copper brown, of common stature, muscular, healthy, cleanly, and some of them handsome. The population is supposed to be about 200,000. The climate is healthy; the inhabitants are active and industrious, and acquainted with neither riches, want, nor oppression. The sea-coast abounds with fish, in catching which they are extremely expert, and on their coasts are found great numbers and variety of shell-fish. They are exceedingly fond of iron; and will readily give the produce of the islands in exchange, such as hogs, fowls, fish, yams, bread-fruit, plantains, cocoa-nuts, sugar-canes, &c.: good water is scarce, or it is generally difficult for navigators to obtain it in sufficient quantity.

Galicia, (an. Callæcia,) pr. Spain, bounded N. and W. by the sea, E. by Asturia and Leon, and S. by Portugal, from which it is separated by the river Minho. The soil in general is unequal and the country mountainous, with some small plains on the sea coast. It contains 64 cities and towns, but few considerable ones, 3,242 parishes, 242,264 families, 12,637 religious, 11 cathedrals, 34 hospitals, 14 colleges, 79 convents of men, and 24 of women. The principal towns are Compostella, Corunna, Lugo, Orense, Ferrol, and Vigo. Sq. m. 16,736. Pop. 1,400,000. The inhabitants are styled Gallegos, and remarkable for their quiet and hospitable disposition, and simplicity of manners.

Galicia, pr. Austria, formerly a part of Poland, bounded N. by the kingdom of Poland, E. by Russia, S. by Moldavia, Transylvania, and Hungary, and W. by Austrian Silesia. Lon. 18. 35. to 26. 50. E. Lat. 47. 50. to 50. 45. N. Sq. m. 32,189. Pop. 3,755,454; of whom about 1,850,000 are Poles, 1,409,000 Russians, 200,000 Walachians, 190,000 Jews, 72,000 Germans, 5,500 Armenians.—Another statement makes the number of Jews, in 1817, 422,000. The state religion is Catholic, though the majority are of the Greek church. Greek parishes 2,800; Catholic 1,066. Both have an archbishop at Lemberg.

It contains a part of the late palatinates of Lublin, Sandomir, Cracow, Red Russia, &c., and formerly had the title of Galicia and Lodomeria. It is now divided in 18 districts or circles. The chief towns are Lemberg, the capital, Halicz, Brody, Jaroslaw, Prezemyśl, Stanislowow, Tarnopol, and Czernowitz. The last is the capital of Bukowine, which is included in Galicia.—The rivers are the Vistula, Dniester, Dunajez, San, and Wisloka.

It consists of an immense plain, with scarcely an elevation, except in the south where it is intersected by branches of the Carpathian mountains. The climate is temperate, rather warm; the soil generally fertile, producing corn, flax, rape-seed, and fruit. Corn and cattle are exported, but agriculture is in a very backward state. The inhabitants are indolent. The commerce is in the hands of the Jews; the land is possessed by the nobles, and the peasantry are extremely poor.

Ganges, called by the natives Ganga, i. e. the river, one of the greatest rivers of Asia, which rises from the south side of the Himmala mountains, between Lon. 78. & 79. E. Lat. 31. & 32. N. After flowing through Serinagur, it is joined in Lat. 30. 9. N. by the Alacananda. Pursuing a course of 30 or 40 miles further, it issues from the mountains of Hurdwar. At Allahabad it is joined by the large river Jumna, and this junction forms the most venerated place of Hindoo ablution. It afterwards receives the Goomty, Gogra, Soane, Bagmutty, Gunduck, Coosy, Teesta, and numerous smaller rivers. It divides into numerous branches, called the Mouths of the Ganges, which flow into the bay of Bengal, between Lon. 88. & 91. E. Lat. 21. 40. & 22. 30. N. The main branch receives the great river Burrampooter, about 40 miles above the bay of Bengal. Its general course is southeasterly; its length upwards of 1,600 miles; at 500 m. from its mouth it is 4 miles wide and 60 feet deep in the rainy season, and 30 feet deep in the dry. Its descent is computed at 4 inches per mile; its motion in the dry season less than 3 miles an hour; in the wet season, 5 or 6, and in particular circumstances and situations, 7 or 8. It is supposed to discharge, on an average throughout the year, 180,000 cubic feet of water in a second.

The Ganges, like the Nile, has a very wide Delta, extending east and west about 200 miles, and commencing about 200 miles or 300 by the course of the river, from the sea, and intersected by numerous branches. A part of it is an uninhabited country, called Sunderbunds, overgrown with forests and infested with tigers. The westernmost branch, called the Hoogly, which is formed by the Cossimbazar and Jellinghy, is the only branch commonly navigated by ships. The country through which it flows, except the Sunderbunds, is healthy, and the water salubrious, and highly esteemed by the natives.—Some of the principal cities on this river and its branches are Calcutta, Dacca, Moorshedabad, Patna, Benares, Allahabad, Lucknow, Agra, and Delhi.

Genesareth, or Gennezareth, called also Chinnereth, Cinneroth, Genesar, Sea of Galilee, and Sea of Tiberias, lake, Palestine, 28 E. Acre, 45 N. Jerusalem. It is 17 miles long, and 6 broad. The Jordan passes through it. Its waters are sweet and transparent, and abound with fish. "Its broad and extended surface," says Dr. Clarke, "covering the bottom of a profound valley, environed by lofty and precipitous eminences, added to the impression of a certain reverential awe under which every Christian pilgrim approaches it, give a character of dignity unparalleled by any similar scenery."

Genesee, r. which rises in Pennsylvania, and runs north through New-York, and flows into lake Ontario at Charlotte, 6 miles below Rochester. At the distance of 6 miles from its mouth, are falls of 96 feet, and one mile higher up, other falls of 75 feet. Above these it is navigable for boats nearly 70 miles, where are two other falls, of 60 and 90 feet, one mile apart, in Nunda, S. of Leicester. This river waters one of the finest tracts of land in the state. its alluvial flats are extensive and very fertile.

Geneva, city, Switz., capital of a small canton; 42 miles N. Chambery, 70 NE. Lyons, 72½ posts SE. Paris, by Bourg en Bresse and Macon, 58 by Dijon and Mount Jura. Lon. 6. 9. W. Lat. 46. 12. N. Pop. 25,000. It is situated on the confines of Savoy and France, at the southern extremity of the lake of Geneva; the Rhone passes through it, dividing it into two unequal parts. It is elevated 1,220 feet above the level of the sea.

Geneva is greatly celebrated for its romantic and delightful situation, and has beautiful walks in every direction. The adjacent country is wonderfully picturesque, and abounds in magnificent views, formed by the town, the lake, the numerous hills and mountains, particularly the Saleve and the Mole, rising suddenly from the plain in a variety of fantastic forms, backed by the glaciers of Savoy, with their frozen tops glistening in the sun, and the majestic Mont Blanc, rearing its head far above the rest. The city is irregularly built; the houses are high, consisting frequently of 4 or 5 stories, and many of them have arcades of wood, which are raised even to the upper stories. The public buildings are the Hotel de Ville, the arsenal, the college or university, the public library, the hospital, the theatre, the cathedral, 5 Reformed churches, and 1 Lutheran ch. Geneva has been long celebrated for watch-making, which employs nearly 7,000 individuals, and a great part of Europe is supplied with watches from this place. Other manufactures are the making of mathematical, surgical, and other instruments, jewellery, toys, woollens, muslin, chintz, silk, and porcelain. The inhabitants are distinguished for their industry, good morals, intelligence, and politeness. It is much resorted to by strangers, who enjoy uncommon privileges; and though comparatively small, it has acquired a celebrity equal to that of the first capitals.

The system of education, which prevails at Geneva, is perhaps not surpassed by that of any other city in Europe. The course of instruction in the literary seminary here, is divided into two parts, the public school and the academy or university. Children, from the age of 5 to 14 or 16, are taught, in the first department of the seminary, the various elementary branches of learning, together with the Greek and Latin languages. In this department there are 11 instructors. After having finished this part of the course, they are admitted into the second department, where they pass 4 years under the instruction of the professors. The two first years are devoted to belles lettres, and the two last, to the different branches of philosophy. The number of professors, in 1814, was 22, and the number of students in the two departments, 1,000. The public library contains 50,000 printed volumes and 200 MSS., among which are 24 vols. of Calvin's sermons, and a large collection of the letters of that celebrated reformer. Geneva is famous for having been the centre and asylum of the reformed religion. It has long been distinguished as a seat of learning, and has given birth to many persons of eminence; among whom are Diodati, Tronchin, Turretin, Pictet, Vernet, Casaubon, Le Clerc, J. J. Rousseau, Mallet, Burlemaqui, De Lome, Bonnet, Le Sage, Saussure, Necker, and Madame de Stael.

The late republic of Geneva, was a very small territory, containing 34,704 inhabitants. This republic, together with some acquisitions from Savoy, now forms the small canton of Geneva. The soil is gravelly, not very fertile, but remarkably well cultivated. The climate is healthy, but rather cold. Pop. 44,000. Sq. m. 101.

Geneva, (Lake of,) or Lake of Lemman, (an. Lemanus,) large lake between Switzerland and Savoy, in a valley which separates the Alps from Mount Jura. The length along the coast of Switzerland is 50 miles, on the side of Savoy 42; the greatest breadth 10 miles; its greatest depth, about 1,000 feet. Sq. m. 242. It is greatly celebrated for its beauty and picturesque scenery, and is undoubtedly the finest lake in Europe; that of Constance only has been supposed to equal it. The water is clear, except where the entrance of the Rhone makes it foul by the quantity of mud it brings along with it in its course. Near Geneva it is shallow, but in some parts exceedingly deep, but it is never frozen. It abounds in fish, remarkable as well for their excellence as size. The scenery all around is most magnificent, the north side being fertile and beautifully diversified, while the south rises gradually till its mountains form the highest of the Alpine range.

Genoa, country, Italy, once an independent republic, now a province of Sardinia, bounded W. by Nice, N. by Piedmont, Milanese, and Parmesan, E. by Tuscany, and S. by the Mediterranean; about 120 miles in length, but scarcely in any part more than 20 in breadth, and is divided into 6 districts. The country is mountainous, and part of it covered with barren rocks, which serve for its defence. Some of the mountains are covered with wood, and some yield good pasture. There is but a small quantity of arable land. Sq. m. 2,332. Pop. in 1819, 636,728. This country was anciently styled Upper Liguria. In 1798 it took the name of the Ligurian republic; in 1805 it was incorporated with the French empire; and in 1815 it was made over to the king of Sardinia by the congress of Vienna.

Genoa, (an. Genua,) city, Italy, capital of the country of Genoa; 64 S. Milan, 66 SE. Turin. Lon. 8. 58. E. Lat. 44. 25. N. Pop. in 1766, 100,000; in 1806, 75,861. H. 15,000; in 1819, stated at 85,000. Abp. see. It is situated at the northern point of the Mediterranean, called the gulf of Genoa, anciently the Ligustic gulf, and stands on the declivity of a hill. On the land side it is surrounded by a double wall; the inner inclosing the town with a circuit of 6 miles; the outer taking in several hills with a circuit of nearly 12 miles. From the commanding situation of the ground, it is a place of great strength. When viewed from the harbour Genoa and its environs present the form of an amphitheatre, of which the city forms one side, and the harbour the centre. The white buildings, erected on successive terraces, form a contrast with the naked appearance of the Apennines, and give the town an air of great magnificence; but the interior does not altogether correspond with these impressions. The houses are indeed well built, but the streets are generally irregular and so narrow that it is difficult to pass them in a carriage; and the extreme density makes the town appear dark and melancholy, particularly in winter.

Three of the streets form exceptions to the rest; they are regular, spacious, and lined with the palaces of great families, of vast and lofty dimensions, some entirely of marble, and all ornamented with marble portals, porticos, and columns; and no less magnificent in the interior. The public edifices are no less splendid than the abodes of the citizens, and are profusely ornamented with marbles and gilding. Among the most remarkable are the palace, the ancient residence of the doge, the arsenal, the cathedral, and the great hospital. The city contains 32 parish churches, 69 cloisters, 3 public libraries, 2 gymnasia, a university, and academies of painting, sculpture, architecture, sciences, and literature.

The harbour is in the form of a semicircle, inclosed by two strong moles; the water in the deepest is sufficient to admit ships of 80 guns; but the entrance is difficult. Commerce was always the favourite pursuit of the Genoese; and the trade of the city though less than in the 15th and 16th centuries, is still considerable. The exports consist of rice, fruit, and olive oil, the produce of the adjacent country; also the manufactures of the city, viz. silks, damasks, and particularly velvets. The bank of Genoa was, in the day of its prosperity, one of the greatest establishments of the kind in Europe. It was founded in 1407, and finally dissolved by Bonaparte.

George, (Lake,) lake, N. Y., between Washington and Warren cos., 36 miles in length, but rarely exceeding 2 in breadth. It lies south of lake Champlain, with which it communicates by an outlet 3 miles long. This outlet during its course descends upwards of 100 feet. The lake is said to contain as many islands as there are days in the year, on some of which are found beautiful crystals of quartz. It is a body of pure transparent water, never rendered turbid; and the bottom is perfectly visible, even where the depth is great. It abounds with the finest fish, bass, trout, and various other kinds. It is surrounded by high mountains, covered with evergreens, and is greatly admired on account of its beautiful and picturesque scenery. It is much visited in summer in connexion with the waters of Ballston and Saratoga.—This lake has been conspicuous in American wars, several battles have been fought on its borders, and remains of military works around it are still visible.

Georgetown, p-t. & port of entry, Washington co. and District of Columbia, on NE. bank of the Potomac, about 200 miles from its mouth, and 300 from the capes of Virginia, 3 W. of the capitol in Washington. Lon. 77. 5. W. Lat. 38. 55. N. Pop. in 1810, 4,948; in 1820, 7,360. It is separated from Washington by a small river, called Rock creek, over which there are two bridges. It contains a market house, a college, a Lancasterian school, a public library of 1,200 volumes, 4 banks, and 5 houses of public worship, 2 for Episcopalians, 1 for Presbyterians, and 2 for Methodists.

The situation is very pleasant, commanding a beautiful view of the river, the city of Washington, and the surrounding country. The houses are principally built of brick, and many of them are elegant. On the hills near the town, there are several fine country seats. The situation is very healthy, and the water excellent. It is a flourishing town, and a place of considerable trade. The shipping owned here, in 1816, amounted to 6,839 tons. In consequence of the difficulties of navigation occasioned by a bar 3 miles below the town, a considerable part of the produce is transported to Alexandria, and exported from that place.

Georgetown College is a Catholic institution, under the direction of the incorporated Catholic clergy of Maryland. It was first incorporated in 1799, and was duly authorised to confer degrees by act of Congress in 1815. The number of students, in 1813, was 137; college officers 12. There are 2 college edifices, both of brick, spacious, handsome, and convenient; finely situated on elevated ground, commanding a delightful prospect. The library contains between 6 and 7,000 volumes; and the philosophical apparatus is valuable.

GEORGIA, Grusia, or Guesia, country, Asia, between the Black and Caspian seas, north of Armenia, and south of Circassia, on the frontiers of Russia and Persia, since 1801 in the possession of Russia. Sq. m. 18,600. Pop. about 320,000. It combines the mountainous character of the Caucasian region with that of the fertile plains of Persia, and unites the products of both the temperate and tropical climates. It is well watered, and possesses great natural advantages. Being situated on the frontiers of Russia and Persia, it has suffered much by war: a struggle was long maintained between its native princes and the sovereigns of Persia. The inhabitants consist mostly of Christians of the Greek church; also Jews, Armenians, Tartars, and Russians. The Georgians, like the Circassians, are celebrated for their beauty. See Circassia. Georgia and Circassia occupy the Caucasian regions between the Black and Caspian seas, and their limits are not well distinguished. Georgia originally included nearly the whole southern declivity of Caucasus, extending from the Black to the Caspian seas; but recently the name has been restricted to that part of the region which was subjected by Persia; and Mingrelia, Imiretta, and Guriel were detached from it. It is divided into 4 provinces, Cartuel, Kaketi, or Kacheti, Kisik, and Georgian Armenia. The rivers are the Kur and Araxes. Teflis is the capital, and the only considerable town.

GEORGIA, one of the U. S., bounded N. by Tennessee and N. Carolina, NE. by S. Carolina, E. by the Atlantic, S. by Florida, and W. by Alabama. Lon. 80. 50. to 86. 6. W. Lat. 30. 30. to 35. Towns. Milledgeville is the seat of government. Savannah and Augusta are the largest towns. The other most considerable towns are Washington, Louisville, Darien, St. Mary's, Greensborough, Petersburg, and Sparta.

Education. The legislature has established a college at Athens, styled Franklin college, and has made provision for an academy in each county; the college and academies all to be united under the name of the University of Georgia. An increasing attention is now paid to education. The state has a common school fund of $500,000; and a fund for internal improvement of the same amount.

Religion. The Baptists and Methodists are the most numerous denominations. Other denominations are Presbyterians and Episcopalians; a few Roman Catholics, German Lutherans, Quakers, and Jews.

Government. The legislature consists of a senate and a house of representatives, chosen annually by counties, each county sending one senator, and not less than one, nor more than four representatives. The governor is elected for two years, by a joint vote of both houses. The legislature meets on the 2d Tuesday in January. —The constitution provides for a census of the state to be made once in 7 years.

Rivers. The principal rivers are the Savannah, Ogechee, Alatamaha, Satilla, Oakmulgee, Oconee, St. Mary's, Flint, Chatahoochee, Tallapoosa, and Coosa.

Islands. The coast of Georgia for 4 or 5 miles inland is a salt marsh, mostly uninhabited. In front of this, towards the sea, there is a chain of islands of grey rich soil, covered in their natural state with pine, hickory, and live oak, and yielding on cultivation sea-island cotton. The principal of these islands are Tybee, Wassaw, Ossabaw, St. Catharine's, Sapello, St. Simon's, Jekyl, and Cumberland.

Face of the country and soil. Back of the salt marsh there is a narrow margin of land, of nearly the same quality with that of the islands. In the rear of this margin commences the pine barrens. The rivers and creeks are every where bordered with swamps or marsh, which, at every tide, for fifteen or twenty miles from the coast, are either wholly or partially overflowed. These constitute the rice plantations. The pine barrens extend from 60 to 90 miles from the sea, beyond which the country becomes uneven, diversified with hills and mountains, of a strong, rich soil, producing cotton, tobacco, Indian corn, wheat, and other kinds of grain. The northwestern part of the state is mountainous, and abounds in sublime and picturesque scenery. The soil is various; but a large proportion of it is very productive. At a distance from the sea it changes from grey to red; in some places it is gravelly, but fertile; and farther back in the country its tint is gradually deepened, till it becomes what is called the molatto soil, consisting of black mould and red earth. This sort of land is generally strong, and affords abundant crops of wheat, tobacco, corn, &c. It is succeeded in its turn by a soil that is nearly black, and very rich, on which are large quantities of black walnut and mulberry.

Productions. The staple production is cotton; next to that rice. The forests afford an abun-tant supply of fine timber, consisting chiefly of oak, pine, hickory, mulberry, and cedar. The kinds of fruit are melons in great perfection, figs in plenty, oranges, pomegranates, olives, lemons, limes, citrons, pears, and peaches. The pine barrens produce grapes of large size and excellent flavour. The exports, which consist chiefly of cotton, rice, lumber, tobacco, canes, deer skins, and maize, amounted, in 1817, to $8,790,714.

Climate. The winters are mild and pleasant; snow is seldom seen, nor is vegetation interrupted by severe frosts. The thermometer usually fluctuates between 40 and 60 degrees. In the low country, in the vicinity of the swamps, bilious complaints and fevers are very common during the months of July, August, and September. At the approach of this season, the rich planters, with their families, remove either to the sea islands, or to more elevated situations.

Mineral waters. There are several valuable mineral springs; Indian springs, the most celebrated, 16 W. Monticello; one near Washington; one 12 SE. Louisville; and another 5 N. Danielsville.

Indians. A large part of Georgia is in the possession of the Creek and Cherokee Indians. The Creeks possess a tract of about 15,000 sq. m. in the SW., watered by Flint river, and lying between the Oakmulgee and Chatahoochee. The Cherokees possess the NW. part. Their territory formerly comprised about 16,000 sq. m., but in 1819, they ceded a large district to the U. S. The white population is in the eastern part.

Georgia, (New,) or South Georgia, isl. in S. Atlantic ocean, about 90 miles in length, and 30 in breadth. It abounds in bays and harbours, but the prodigious quantity of ice on the coast renders it inaccessible during a great part of the year. The coasts are bounded with high perpendicular rocks of ice. The interior country is not less savage in appearance; the summits of the rocks are lost in the clouds, and the valleys are covered with eternal snow; there is neither tree nor shrub. Lon. 37. W. Lon. 6. 80. to 19. 52. E. Lat. 45. 4. to 54. 40. N.; 650 miles long from N. to S., 600 broad from E. to W. Sq. m. 225,000.

Divisions. The divisions of Germany have been various at different times. In 1552, Maximilian divided it into 10 circles; Austria, Burgundy, Upper Rhine, Lower Rhine, Franconia, Bavaria, Swabia, Westphalia, Upper Saxony, and Lower Saxony; the first two Catholic, the last two Protestant, the other six mixed. Burgundy, which contained the 17 provinces of the Low Countries, or Netherlands, having long since been detached from the empire, it latterly contained only 9 circles. In addition to these great divisions, there were other countries which formed portions of the German empire, Bohemia, Moravia, Silesia, Lusatia, and some smaller districts. The electors were 9 in number, of Mentz, Treves, Cologne, Bavaria, Palatine, Saxony, Brunswick-Luneburg, Brandenburg, and Bohemia.

The number of princes, secular and ecclesiastical, was upwards of 300, each independent in the administration of his own territory, but subject to the emperor as head of the empire, and to certain laws, enacted at different times, for the common advantage. There were besides a number of free towns, and a class of nobles, who acknowledged no sovereign but the emperor. The constitution of this great body was extremely complicated: the emperor was at first chosen by the princes at large; in the course of time the princes deputed their votes to certain representatives called electors; and the latter eventually took on themselves the nomination without the interference of their constituents.

The states of Germany passed through various changes from the commencement of the French revolution to the sitting of the congress of Vienna, in 1814 and 1815. The states, reduced in number, but augmented in extent, were formed anew by the congress into a federative body, to be governed by a diet. The German territories now comprise about one third part of the empire of Austria, the greatest part of Prussia, Holstein and Lauenburg belonging to Denmark, Luxemburg belonging to the Netherlands; the kingdom of Hanover, of which his Britanic majesty takes the title of king; the kingdoms of Bavaria, Wurtemberg, and Saxony; 27 smaller independent states governed by native German princes; and 4 free cities.

The following is a list of the number of votes in the diet, population in 1818, square miles, revenue, military contingent, and capital towns of each state. The total population, 30,091,849. Revenue, £18,646,000 sterling. The pop. of the German part only of Austria & Prussia is included.

Government. The ordinary concerns of the Germanic confederation are entrusted to a federative diet of 17 members, and the making or altering of its fundamental laws to a general assembly of 70 members, from the various states or members of the confederation, as stated in the above table. The sessions are held at Frankfort on the Maine. The members are equal in rights, but Austria presides. The prince of Hesse Homburg has lately been admitted as a member of the confederation.

Military Force. The military contingent in time of peace is 120,000 men; 96,000 infantry, 18,000 cavalry, and 6,000 artillery. In war, the force in the field is to be 1 in 100 on the population, making a total of little upwards of 300,000, as in the above table.

Universities. Germany is famous for its universities, which are much resorted to from other countries. The number before 1802 was 36; since that period several have been suppressed, and the present number is 20. Of those which stand in the first rank are Gotttingen, Halle, Jena, Leipsic, and Heidelberg.—Vienna is the most eminent as a medical school. The following is a list of the universities, together with the number of students, as stated in 1817-18. Those designated by P. are Protestants, C. Catholic, and M. Mixed.

	Students,
Vienna, C. Austria,	957
Prague C. Bohemia, Austria	880
Berlin P. Prussia	600
Breslau M. Pru. Silesia	366
Halle P. Pru. Saxony	500
Bonn M. Pru. Cologne	500
Greifswalde P. Pru. Pomerania	55
Landshut C. Bavaria	640
Wurzburg C. Bav. Franconia	365
Erlangen P. Bav. Franconia	180
Leipsick P. Saxony	911
Gottingen P. Hanover,	1,132
Tubingen P. Wurtemberg	355
Heidelberg P. Baden	363
Freyburg C. Baden	275
Marburg P. Hesse-Cassel	197
Giessen P. Hesse-Darmstadt	241
Kiel P. Holstein, Denmark	107
Jena P. Weimer	659
Rostock P. Mecklenburg-Schwerin	100

Religion. The Protestant religion prevails in the north, and the Catholic in the south. General toleration in religion was adopted by the congress of Vienna as a leading principle.—

Computed number of different persuasions.—

Catholics, above 15,000,000 Jews, . 183,000
Lutherans, . 12,000,000 Moravians, 25,000
Reformed, . 2,200,000 Greek ch. 14,000

Libraries, &c. In about 150 towns there are libraries open to the public, many of which are very large. Besides the universities, there are numerous seminaries styled gymnasia, many of which are celebrated schools of learning.

Literature. The Germans are distinguished for attainments in literature, science, and the arts. They are particularly eminent in biblical and critical learning, statistics, political economy, mathematics, astronomy, chemistry, and mechanics. In no other country is authorship so extensively made a business for life.

Language. The German language is spoken by a greater population than any other in Europe, except perhaps the French. It is derived from the Teutonic, and is divided into a number of dialects. The Saxon dialect, called High German, is the language of books and genteel society.

Cities. The following are the most populous cities.—

Vienna . . . 260,000	Dresden . . . 49,074
Berlin . . . 188,000	Bremen . . . 36,630
Hamburg . . 106,920	Cologne . . . 41,706
Prague . . . 81,966	Trieste . . . 36,000
Breslau . . . 76,813	Gratz . . . 34,012
Munich . . . 60,024	Leipsic . . . 32,492
Frankf't, Maine 60,000	Magdeburg . . 30,250

The principal trading towns are Vienna, Hamburg, Lubeck, Bremen, Brunswick, Magdeburg, Frankfort on the Maine, Breslau, Leipsic, Augsburg, Nuremberg, Prague, and Trieste. Leipsic is the greatest mart of German literature, and a centre for booksellers. The largest fairs are at Leipsic, Frankfort, Brunswick, and Bolzano.

Rivers and Canals. Germany is intersected by numerous rivers, which afford great advantages to commerce. It counts 520 rivers in all; 60 navigable to a great extent; and 6, viz. the Danube, Rhine, Elbe, Oder, Weser, and Maine, ranking among the noblest in Europe. The canals are comparatively few. The principal are the canal of Kiel, joining the Baltic to the North sea; the canal of Travemunde, extending from Lubeck to Hamburg; and some others, chiefly in the Prussian states.

Face of the country. Germany is divided into two great portions, the northern and southern, by a range of mountains called the Sudetic chain, which commences near the western side, on the north of the Maine, and traverses Hesse Cassel and the south part of Saxony and Silesia, till it ends in the Carpathian chain. The northern part is styled Lower Germany, and is mostly level; the southern part, styled Upper Germany, is greatly diversified, consisting in part of extensive plains, but traversed also by vast ranges of mountains.

Climate. The climate in the north is rather severe, in the south mild, and generally healthy, except in the marshy districts around the North sea. Vienna is also considered unhealthy from its humid position.

Soil. The soil is very various; sandy plains
Vol. I.

and barren heaths abound in the northeast; swamps and marshes in the northwest; but large portions of the interior and southwest parts are uncommonly fertile

Productions. The productions are wheat, barley, oats, other kinds of grain, flax, madder, rape seed, hops, wine, cattle, horses, sheep, &c. Agriculture is backward in many parts, particularly in the south.

Minerals. These are iron, copper, tin, lead, silver, cobalt, bismuth, quicksilver, salt, marble, fuller's earth, and porcelain clay.

Mineral springs. Germany contains upwards of 1,000 mineral springs and baths, of which the most celebrated are Carlsbad in Bohemia, Toplitz in Austria, Seltzer in Nassau, Pyrmont in Westphalia, and Aix la Chapelle.

Ghent, (Gand in French, Gandavum in Latin,) city, Neth., capital of East Flanders; 30 SW. Antwerp, 35 N. Lille. Lon. 3. 44. E. Lat. 51. 3. N. Pop. 60,765. H. 10,000. Bp. see. It is situated on the conflux of the rivers Scheldt, Lys, Moeze, and Lieve, which, with a great number of canals, cut through it every way, divide the town into 26 small islands, which are joined together by upwards of 300 small wooden bridges. The Nervii chose it for their city, and after them the Vandals, who gave it the name of Wanda, from whence the name of Gand, or Ghent, is probably derived. The city is surrounded by a wall, about 15 miles in circ., enclosing numerous cornfields and gardens. Ghent is entitled to notice on the score of literature, having a public library, and academies of drawing, architecture, and the fine arts. But the chief establishment of this nature is the college, having been long in repute, and was in 1816 erected into a university.

Besides the cathedral, it has 6 parish churches, 49 cloisters, and 24 hospitals. The streets are wide and straight, the houses large, but not elegant, and the market places spacious. It has considerable trade in corn, with lace, cloth, linen, and silk manufactures, much assisted by two navigable canals, one to Sas de Ghent, the other to Burges, Ostend, &c. It was formerly much more populous and commercial than at present. It was for a time the capital of the Belgic provinces. Its prosperity goes back to the 12th and 13th centuries; and it was from this town that the woollen manufacture was introduced into England.—A treaty of peace between Great Britain and the United States, was signed here, on the 24th December, 1814.—Natives, John of Gaunt or Ghent, Charles V., and Heinsius.

Giant of the Valley, mt. in Elizabethtown, Essex co. N. Y.; 1 SW. of the court house. It is estimated to be 1,200 feet above the plain, and commands a very extensive prospect. On the NE. side there is an almost perpendicular declivity of 700 feet.

Giant's Causeway, promontory, Ireland, in the county of Antrim, on N. Coast, W. of Bengore Head; 8 NE. Coleraine, 120 N. Dublin. It consists of many hundred thousands of columns, composed of a hard black rock, rising perpendicularly from 200 to 400 feet above the water's edge. The columns, or basaltes, are generally pentagonal, or have 5 sides, and are so closely attached to each other, that though perfectly distinct from top to bottom, scarcely any thing can be introduced between them. This extraordinary disposition of the rocks continues below the water's edge; it also obtains in a small degree on the opposite shore in Scotland. The columns are not each of one solid stone in an upright position, but composed of several short lengths exactly joined, not with flat surfaces, but are articulated into each other, as a ball in a socket, the one end of the joint having a cavity of 3 or 4 inches deep, into which the convex end of the opposite joint is exactly fitted. This is not visible till the stones are disjointed.—The Giant's Causeway, is accounted the greatest natural curiosity in Ireland, and one of the most remarkable of the kind in the world.

Gibraltar, promontory and town in the south of Spain, on the straits to which it gives name, near the part where the entrance into the Mediterranean between Europe and Africa is narrowest ; 16 N. Ceuta in Africa, 70 S. Seville. Lon. 5. 19. W. Lat. 36. 7. N. Pop. of the town 12,000, exclusive of the garrison. The promontory consists of a great rocky mountain running from north to south, about 3 miles in length, and from $\frac{1}{2}$ to $\frac{3}{4}$ m. in width ; and from 1,200 to 1,449 feet in height. On the north side is a low isthmus, no where more than 10 feet high, about $\frac{1}{2}$ m. long, and $\frac{1}{4}$ m. wide, connecting this vast mass of rock with the continent. The northern front of the rock is almost perpendicular ; the east side formed of frightful precipices ; the south narrow and abrupt ; the west front is almost as abrupt, but it may be approached by shipping from the bay, and it is here that the efforts of assailants have been directed, and here are the great batteries and works of defence. It was first fortified in the modern style, in the reign of Charles V. It was taken by the English in 1704, and it has since been repeatedly attacked, but always without success ; and is deemed impregnable. Its importance arises chiefly from its spacious bay, which is 9 miles long, and 5 broad. It is well protected from winds, and forms a convenient station for fleets and ships of war.

The town stands at the foot of the promontory on the northwest side. It contains a naval hospital, victualing office, barracks, an English church, a Catholic chapel, 3 synagogues, a theatre, a garrison, library, &c. The houses have flat roofs, and large bow windows. The inhabitants are composed of British, Spaniards, Italians, Jews, Moors, &c.—The rock composing this vast promontory, consists chiefly of primary marble, which runs in large strata of 20, 30, 40, and 50 feet in thickness, and contains a number of caves. Of these the most remarkable is St. Michael's cave, on the south side of the rock about 1,000 feet above the level of the sea. The mouth is only 5 feet wide, but within the cavern is very spacious, leading to a number of smaller caves.—Gibraltar was called Calpe by the ancients, and in their mythological language one of the Pillars of Hercules, opposite to Abyla the other Pillar.

Gibraltar, (Straits of;) form an entrance from the Atlantic into the Mediterranean. The narrowest part is a little to the west of Gibraltar, and 15 miles across. A remarkable peculiarity of these straits, is that a strong current always runs from the ocean into the Mediterranean. The ancients called them Gaditanum and Herculaneum Fretum, or Straits of Hercules.

Gibraltar, t. Venezuela, in Maracaybo, situated on E. coast of the lake of Maracaybo ; 100 SSE. Maracaybo. Lon. 71. W. Lat. 9. 25. N. In the environs is gathered the best cocoa of the province ; and an excellent kind of tobacco grows, of high esteem in Old Spain. The air is exceedingly unwholesome in the rainy season, on which account the merchants and planters generally retire, at that time, to Maracaybo. It is defended by some fortifications.

Gizeh, t. Egypt, on the left bank of the Nile; 3 SW. Cairo. Pop. 8, or 10,000. The walls are of great extent, with only one gate to the country; they are 10 feet high and 3 thick; the palace is in the south quarter, near the Nile. Here is a cannon foundry. The houses are built of brick and clay; and the town has no other ornament than 4 or 5 mosques, with minarets and some palm-trees. A great number of earthen pots are made here, and tiles, coarse and without varnish, of which the Egyptians do not well know the use. Gizeh is chiefly distinguished for the pyramids situated in its neighbourhood, 2 of which, those of Cheops and Cephrenes, are the most remarkable in Egypt. "If we credit some authors," says Norden, "the city of Memphis was situated in the place where this town now stands; and I own that this opinion does not want probability."

Glarus, or Glaris, canton, Switz., bounded N. and E. by St. Gall, S. by Grisons, and W. by Uri and Schweitz. Pop. 24,100; six sevenths Protestants. Sq. m. 403. It is surrounded on all sides, except the NE. by lofty mountains, which are covered with perpetual snow. The aspect is by no means attractive; the soil stony, and little adapted to agriculture. The chief wealth arises from the pastures, which feed sheep, goats, and larger cattle; and large quantities of cheese are exported. The corn raised is not sufficient for the inhabitants. The chief river is the Linth; lakes Wallendstadt and Clonthal. It is divided into 15 small districts. The government is strictly democratic; all males above 16 years of age have a voice in the general assembly.

Glasgow, (New), p-t. Amherst co. Va.; about 20 N. by E. Lynchburg, W. 195.

Glasgow, city, Scot., in Lanerkshire; 42 W. Edinburgh, 496 N. London. Lon. 4. 16. W. Lat. 55. 52. N. Pop. in 1780, 42,832, in 1791, 66,578, in 1801, 83,769, in 1811, 100,749; and including the suburbs, 110,460, and, in 1815, the population of the city and suburbs was estimated at 120,000. It is situated on the banks of the Clyde, which, by an act of parliament, and at a considerable expense, has been within these last 40 years made navigable for vessels drawing 7 feet 6 inches of water.

In regard to population, commerce, and manufactures, Glasgow, is the first city in Scotland, and in the beauty and splendour of its buildings, and the importance of its institutions, the second. Its length and breadth are ascertained by 2 main streets, which cross each other at right angles; one 80 feet wide and $1\frac{1}{2}$ m. long, the other from 47 to 54 feet wide, and upwards of $\frac{3}{4}$ m. long. The city contains 3 elegant squares, and has many magnificent public edifices, of which the cathedral, or high church is the chief. This cathedral was begun in 1123, and is, perhaps, the most entire specimen of Gothic architecture in Scotland. It is 284 feet long, 65 broad, and 90 high within the walls, with 2 large towers, on one of which is a spire, making the whole 220 feet high. The charitable institutions are numerous and well administered. There are 36 places of public worship, 13 of which belong to the establishment. The situation of Glasgow is singularly favourable for carrying on manufactures, and commerce, being placed on the border of one of the richest coal and mineral fields in Great Britain, and having the Atlantic open to it on the one hand, through the Clyde, and the North sea, on the other, through the Forth and Clyde canal and river Forth. There are belonging to Glasgow, 9 iron founderies, 17 calendering houses, 18 calico printing works, 18 works for weaving by power, which contain 2,800 looms, and produce 8,400 pieces of cloth weekly; and 52 cotton mills containing 511,200 spindles. A part of the cotton mills, which belong to the city, are situated in the country.

Glasgow is distinguished for the number and excellence of its literary institutions. The university was founded in 1450, and is under the direction of a lord chancellor, lord rector, dean of faculty, a reverend principal, and 16 professors. The number of students in 1814, was upwards of 1,400, and in 1819, upwards of 2,000. The buildings are very extensive, having a front of 305 feet to High street, and 282 from east to west. The university is richly endowed, and has a large library, a botanic garden, and a museum, the donation of Dr. William Hunter, one of the most valuable collections in Europe of natural history, paintings, medals, anatomical preparations, &c.; the medals alone are estimated at £30,000.—In an institution, founded in 1796 by Mr. John Anderson, there were, in 1814, 210 medical students; 280 students were instructed in natural philosophy, chemistry, materia medica, and mathematics; and the principles of natural philosophy and mechanics were explained to 490 operative mechanics.—The public grammar school in Glasgow has a rector, 4 teachers, and 520 students. The whole number of pupils at all the seminaries and schools in the city, in 1814, was 10,589.

Glasgow, (Port), s-p. Scot., in Renfrewshire, on the frith of Clyde, $2\frac{1}{2}$ m. above Greenock, 20 W. Glasgow. Lon. 4. 30. W. Lat. 55. 57. N. Pop. 5,116. It is neatly built, surrounded with pleasant villas and gardens, and the environs are very picturesque. The harbour is good, and long continued preferable in some respects to that of Greenock. The trade is chiefly dependent on Glasgow. The shipping registered here, in 1819, amounted to 19,133 tons.

Goa, city, Hind., in Bejapour, on the western coast, capital of the Portuguese settlements in India; 215 SSE. Bombay. Lon. 73. 57. E. Lat. 15. 30. N. It is situated on an island, 24 miles in circ., at the mouth of the Mandova. It consists of two parts; the old city, 8 miles up the river, is now almost deserted by the secular Portuguese, it being unhealthy, and the seat of the inquisition. It, however, contains many magnificent churches, and exhibits specimens of architecture superior to any thing attempted by Europeans in other parts of India, particularly the church and convent of St. Augustine. The viceroy and principal inhabitants reside in the new city, which is at the mouth of the river, within the forts. It has two harbours, one on each side of the island, both of which are well defended by various forts and batteries mounting heavy cannon. In the time of its prosperity, it was a very large and splendid city, and had a great trade: but from the beginning of the 16th century, the Portuguese power in India declined. It still carries on a small trade with the mother country, with China, and the coast of Africa. Pop. of the city and island 20, or 30,000; but very few are genuine Portuguese.—The Portuguese district in Bejapour is fertile, but badly cultivated, and the settlement is almost abandoned by Portugal. Sq. m. 1,060. Pop. 109,000. Churches and chapels computed in 1808, at 200, and upwards of 2,000 priests.

Golconda, now called Hyderabad, pr. Hind., in the Deccan, bounded N. by Berar, E. by the Circars, S. by Mysore, and the Carnatic, and W. by Dowlatabad and Bejapour. It is situated chiefly between Lat. 16. and 19. N. Its ancient name was Tellingana, and it was formerly a portion of a very extensive empire, which comprised all the peninsula from Cape Comorin to the north extremity of Orissa. Much of the soil is very fertile, and produces great crops of cotton rice, and other grain; also vines in abundance. It has been chiefly celebrated for its diamond mines, the principal of which were in the neighbourhood of Raolconda and Culloor, 6,000 men were constantly employed in these mines, but they have ceased to be important, and now hardly pay the expense of working. This country is subject to the nizam. Having long been under a Mahometan government, a considerable portion of the inhabitants are of that religion; the majority however are Hindoos; but the population is by no means equal to that of the British provinces. Hyderabad is the chief town.

Golconda, called also Mankul, fortress, Hind., formerly the capital of Golconda, and the residence of the kings; 5 WNW. Hyderabad. This fortress, for extent, might be called a city, in the middle of which rises a hill like a sugar loaf. It is esteemed by the natives impregnable, but is extremely hot, and unhealthy. It is now considered as the citadel of Hyderabad, and the repository of the wealth of the nizam.

Gondar, t. Africa, and capital of Abyssinia, situated on a hill of considerable height, surrounded on every side by a deep valley. Lon. 37. 40. E. Lat. 12. 30. N. It consists of 10,000 families in time of peace, or 50,000 souls. According to Poncet, who visited Gondar in 1699, it was then 3 or 4 leagues in circuit, and contained 100 churches. It exhibited nothing of the splendour of an European city. The houses were of only 1 story, and there were no shops. The trade, which was extensive, was carried on in a vast open plain, where the goods were daily exposed on mats. The houses are chiefly of clay, the roofs thatched in the form of cones, which is always the construction within the tropical rains. On the W. end of the town is the king's house, formerly a structure of considerable consequence; it was a square building, flanked with square towers; it was formerly 4 stories high, and from the top of it had a magnificent view of all the country southward to the lake Tzana. A great part of this house is now in ruins.

It is pleasantly situated, 1,240 feet above the level of the sea, and contains 7 churches, 3 hospitals, a celebrated gymnasium with 4 classes, and a library of 5,000 volumes, and other public buildings and institutions. The castle called Freidenstein, the residence of the duke, stands on an eminence above the town. Here are two libraries, the larger containing 60,000 volumes, the smaller 20,000 ; a cabinet of natural history, artificial curiosities, and medals, and a numismatic library of 6,000 scarce and valuable works on coins. The inhabitants carry on a considerable trade in woollen manufactures, as also in wool and beer; and exclusive of the profits arising to them from agriculture, receive farther advantages from its being the thoroughfare from Leipzig to Upper Germany.

Gotha, or Gotha-Elf, r. Sweden, which is formed by a number of torrents flowing from the mountains of Norway, and flows into lake Wenner. It passes out of the lake near Wennerburg, and after a further course of about 70 miles, flows into the Cattegat at Gottenburg. Before falling into lake Wenner it bears the name of Clara-Elf. A little below where the river issues from the lake are the great falls of Trollhetta. The whole descent, in 4 cataracts, is about 100 feet. A canal about 2 miles long, and 22 feet wide, with 9 locks, has been constructed around these falls, opening a navigation between Gottenburg and lake Wenner.

Gothland, or Gottland, isl. Sweden, in the Baltic; about 70 miles in length, and 25 in its greatest breadth, formerly an independent kingdom, but now subject to the supreme court of justice at Stockholm. From its convenient situation it has justly acquired the name of the Eye of the Baltic. The soil is fertile, and there are fine woods of oaks and pine, good pastures, and profitable fisheries on this island. Wisby is the capital. Pop. 32,988. Sq. m. 784. It forms the government of Gothland, or Wisby in East Gothland. Lon. 18. 6. to 19. 6. E. Lat. 56. 54. to 57. 56. N.

Gottenburg, Gothenburg, or Gotheburg, s-p. Sweden, capital of West Gothland and the government of Gottenburg, in the south-west of Sweden, on the Cattegat, near the mouth of the Gotha; 40 S. Uddevalla, 140 N. by W. Copenhagen. Lon. 11. 58. E. Lat. 57. 42. N. Pop. in 1805, 17,760; in 1810, 19,856; in 1815, 21,788; 10,770 males, 11,018 females. Bp. see. It stands on a marshy plain, surrounded by precipitous ridges of naked rocks, rising to the height of from 100 to 300 feet, but intersected by several cultivated openings. It consists of 2 parts, one occupying the plain, the other one of the ridges on the west side. The houses on the plain are built on piles, and several of the streets are traversed by canals, bordered with trees, which give it much the appearance of a Dutch town. The houses erected since the late fires, are mostly built of stone or brick; they are large and have flat and concealed roofs. The principal street, called Great Harbour street, runs from east to west, dividing the town into two parts, nearly equal, and consists of well built houses, 3 stories high. The streets are generally wide and clean. The upper town is built with less regularity, but has an imposing appearance, the houses rising one above the other in the form of an amphitheatre.

Gottenburg is next to Stockholm, the principal town in Sweden, with regard to population, commerce, and manufactures. The harbour is the most conveniently situated for foreign trade in Sweden. The principal exports are iron and steel, from the mines of Warmeland; after these, herrings, linen, timber, tar, train oil, and alum. Upwards of 250 vessels belong to the port, and about 1,000 vessels annually enter it. It is the seat of the Swedish East India company. The only considerable public edifices are the exchange, the extensive buildings belonging to the East Indian company, a hospital, and a magnificent church. It contains an academy of sciences, a mercantile academy, and a large provincial school. The English language is much spoken here. It has suffered greatly by fires; in December 1802, 179 houses and the cathedral, and in November, 1804, 200 houses, with the barracks and several granaries, were burnt. It is contemplated to open a line of navigation from Gottenburg to Stockholm, through the river Gotha and the lakes Wenner and Malar, by constructing canals; thus connecting the German ocean and the Baltic.

Göttingen, pr. Han., in the southern extremity, bounded N. by Brunswick and Hildesheim, E. by Brunswick and Pru. Saxony, S. by Pru. Saxony and Hesse Cassel, and W. by Hesse

Cassel. Sq. m. 1,216. Pop. 176,110; Catholics, 9,536; Reformed, 5,200; Jews, 1,203; the remainder Lutherans. H. 27,177. It was constituted a province in 1816, formed of Grubenhagen, the quarter of Gottingen, in Calenburg, a part of Hohenstein, and other small districts. The surface is extremely hilly, the eastern part, including the Harz and the adjoining mountains. It is watered by the Weser, Leine, and Rhume. The climate on the high lands is cold. It is not very productive in corn, but abounds in flax, tobacco, fruit, and pasture, and contains all the mines of silver, copper, lead, and iron in the kingdom.

Göttingen, or Goettingen, t. Han., capital of the province of the same name; 21 NE. Cassel, 51 ESE. Paderborn, 65 S. Hanover. Lon. 9. 55. E. Lat. 51. 32. N. Pop. 8,309, exclusive of the students and military. H. 923. It is situated in a pleasant valley, on the small river Leine, and at the foot of the mountain of Haimberg. It contains a hospital, 4 Lutheran churches, 2 Reformed churches, a Catholic chapel, a gymnasium, and a university. The situation is healthy, the streets wide, well paved, and lighted at night. It was formerly fortified, but the walls are now demolished, and laid out in public walks, which command a pleasant prospect around the town, taking in gardens, meadows, and a number of distant eminences. The town is ancient, and was once Hanseatic. It has some manufactures of linen and woollen.

The principal ornament and support of Göttingen is its celebrated university, which is more numerously attended than any other in Germany. It was founded, in 1784, by George II. of England, and the English sovereign is perpetual rector of it, in his capacity of king of Hanover. It is on a very comprehensive plan, and has 4 faculties, divinity, philosophy, law, and medicine. The number of professors is not fixed, but generally exceeds 40, who are regular professors, together with a number of extraordinary ones. The number of professors and tutors, in 1820, was stated at 65; students, 1,118, of whom 544 were foreigners. The library is one of the largest and most valuable in the world, containing 280,000 vols.; and the botanic garden one of the most celebrated in Europe. It has also a fine observatory, a surgical and lying-in hospital, and an anatomical theatre. In 1751 an academy of sciences was established here, consisting of 3 classes, the mathematical, physical, and historical. To this the scientific world has been indebted for many valuable discoveries and improvements. The university of Göttingen boasts of having cherished many individuals of the highest eminence in literature and science, among whom may be reckoned Mosheim, Michaelis, Mayer, Lichtenberg, Kästner, Bürger, Beckmann, Pütter, Heyne, Martens, Blumenbach, Eichhorn, and Villers.

GREECE, mairtime country, Europe, once highly celebrated, but subject since the 15th century to the Turks, surrounded on all sides, except the north, by the sea; between Lat. 36. and 42. N.

Ancient divisions. The ancient general divisions of Greece were Macedonia, Epirus, Thessaly, Greece Proper, and the Peloponnesus.—Greece Proper included Attica, Megaris, Bœotia, Phocis, Locris, Doris, and Ætolia.

Modern divisions. The modern divisions, which are most familiar, are Macedonia, Albania, Thessaly, Livadia, and the Morea. The Turks have divided Greece into 4 pachalics; 1st Tripolitza, comprising the Morea; 2d, Egripos, or Negropont, containing the island of that name, and a part of the adjoining mainland; 3d, Joannina, including Thessaly and part of Albania; and, 4th, Salonica, including the southern parts of Macedonia. The Seven Ionian islands are formed into a republic, under the protection of Great Britain. The rest of the Grecian islands are subject to Turkey.

Population. The population is estimated at between 3 and 4,000,000; about one half Greeks; the rest Albanians and Turks, with some Jews.

Towns. The principal towns are Salonica, Joannina, Seres, Larissa, Negropont, Livadia, Tripolitza, Misitra, and Athens.

Face of the country. The general aspect of Greece is mountainous; and it is intersected, particularly in the north, by continued ranges, several of which are interesting for their scenery, but more so from their classical recollections.

Mountains and rivers. The most celebrated mountains are Athos, Olympus, Pindus, Eta, Pelion, Ossa, Parnassus, Helicon, and Citheron. The rivers are small, not answering in clearness and size to the description of the ancient poets. Some of the principal are the Achelous, Peneus, Eurotas, Pamisos, and Aous.

Climate, soil, and productions. The climate is propitious, the air temperate, and generally healthy. Much of the soil, both in the plains and the mountainous parts, is very fertile; but agriculture is in a very backward state. The productions are corn, cotton, silk, wool, rice, tobacco, oil, honey, and a variety of fruits.—Pasturage in a great part of the country is the general mode of life.

Commerce. The commerce of Greece is of some importance, amounting annually to nearly £2,000,000 sterling. It is carried on chiefly with Germany, France, Britain, Russia, and Italy. The principal ports are Salonica, Arta, Prevesa, Athens, Napoli di Romania, and Hydra.

Language. The modern Greek is called the Romaic. It is founded on the basis of the ancient language, having a general identity in the radicals.

State of the country. Instead of the cultivated plains, the flourishing cities, and the magnificent edifices of ancient Greece, little else is presented than a series of villages composed of wretched cottages, scattered over a thinly peopled and ill cultivated country. The mode of travelling is on horseback, none of the roads being passable throughout for carriages. The inhabitants are described as active and lively, having little information, but great aptitude for acquisition, and possessing the vices naturally generated by an oppressive and rapacious government.

Antiquities. Many parts of Greece present remains of ancient magnificence and refinement, as the ruins of temples, theatres, aqueducts, columns, arches, walls, &c. Ruins are to be seen at the sites of Athens, Sparta, Nemea, Mycenæ, Phigaleia, Thebes, Argos, Eleusis, Corinth, &c.

Green Mountains, range of mountains, which commence in Canada, and extend S. through Vermont, Massachusetts, & Connecticut. They divide the waters which flow into the Connecticut, from those which flow into lake Champlain and the Hudson. Among the highest summits in Vermont, are Mansfield mountain, Camel's rump, and Killington peak. West rock, near New Haven, Ct., is the southern termination of the chain. The natural growth upon these mountains, is hemlock, pine, spruce, and other evergreens, and they derive their names from their green appearance. There are many fine farms among these mountains, and much of the land upon them is excellent for grazing.

Greenland, country, situated between the straits of Davis and Frobisher, and Iceland. It is not ascertained whether it is a peninsula or an island, though it is generally thought to be joined, in its NW. part, with the continent of N. America. It lies between 4 deg. and 55 deg. W. Lon. Cape Farewell, the most S. point, is in Lon. 42. 42. W. Lat. 49. 38. N. The discoveries have extended to Lat. 78. N. The northern limits are not known. Its breadth from E. to W. is about 1,200 miles. The eastern coast is called East Greenland, the western, West Greenland. A colony from Iceland established themselves on the west coast in the 8th or 9th century, and it has been increased by Norwegians and Danes. The Moravians have 11 missionaries here. The number of people in the colony was stated in 1802, at 5,621; and including the Moravian settlements and the natives, mostly converted to Christianity, the total population of the western coast was estimated at 20,000. Nothing is known respecting the inhabitants on the eastern coast. The climate is very cold, and the country is mountainous: generally barren, but some parts are tolerably fertile, and the sea is well stored with fish. The country abounds in rein-deer, arctic foxes, white bears, sea-wolves, sea-dogs, and sea-cows. It is valuable chiefly on account of its whale fishery. Among its exports are feathers, eider-down, horns of sea unicorns, skins of seals, foxes, white bears, and reindeer.

Greenock, s-p. Scot., in Renfrew, on the Clyde; 47 N. Ayr, 67 W. Edinburgh. Lon. 4. 49. W. Lat. 55. 56. N. Pop. in 1757, 3,900; in 1811, 19,042. In the beginning of the 18th century, Greenock was a small village of thatched cottages; it is now a flourishing town, the principal seaport in Scotland, and has an extensive commerce. The shipping registered here on the 10th Oct. 1818, amounted to 40,195 tons; 55,337 tons of British shipping were the preceding 12 months entered inwards, and 55,524 cleared outwards. The harbour is spacious and commodious, capable of containing 500 sail of ships. From the West-Indies the merchants import rum, sugar, mahogany, cotton, &c.; from America, rice, naval stores, pot-ashes, timber, &c.; from Portugal, wine and fruit; from the Baltic, timber; and other articles from other parts. Their exports consist in coals, herrings, and British manufactures. Packets sail by the canal to Leith, Dundee, London, to all the north parts of the Highlands, and the isles as far as Orkney; and by the Irish channel to Liverpool.

Grenada, or Granada, sometimes called Upper Andalusia, pr. Spain, bounded N. by New-Castile, E. by Murcia, S. by the Mediterranean, and W. Andalusia; about 170 miles in length, and from 20 to 90 in breadth. As this country lies opposite to Africa, and the coast is much exposed to the ravages of corsairs, a great number of towers and forts are erected along the coasts. This province is one of the most healthy and most temperate in Spain, and so fertile as scarcely to stand in need of human industry and culture; rivers, brooks, and springs are innumerable. Chief towns, Grenada, Malaga, Ronda, Loxa, and Almeria. Pop. in 1797, 692,924. Sq. m. 10,125.

Grenada, city, Spain, capital of a province of the same name; 188 S. Madrid. Lon. 3. 40. W. Lat. 37. 17. N. Pop. in 1797, 66,661. H. 12,000. Abp. see. It is situated at the foot of the Sierra Nevada, or Snowy mountains, 1,630 feet above the level of the sea, on 2 hills, which are separated by a river called Darro, which soon after joins the Xenil, that passes by the walls of the town. It is divided into 4 quarters, of which the principal bears the name of Grenada, and is inhabited by the nobility, clergy, and the richest of the citizens, with many public and private buildings. The second quarter is that of Alhambra, which is inhabited by the descendants from the ancient Moors. The city was built by the Moors in the 10th century, and in 1235 became the capital of an empire. It is said to have contained 400,000 inhabitants. Here are two palaces, one built in the year 1280, by the second king of the Moors, the remains of which bear evidence of its wonderful magnificence; the other palace was built by Charles V. A little above Alhambra is another beautiful palace, called Ginaraliph, or Xeneralife, built by a Moorish prince; from the balconies of which is said to be one of the most beautiful prospects in Europe, over the fertile plains of Grenada, terminated by mountains, whose tops are covered with snow. The third quarter is called Albaycin, and the fourth, Antequeruela. The principal manufactures are silks, woollens, leather, saltpetre, and gunpowder. The streets of Grenada are narrow, irregular, and badly paved, none of the houses deserve the name of palaces. It contains 24 parish churches, 38 convents of both sexes, 13 hospitals, a university, an amphitheatre for bull fights, and had a tribunal of inquisition.

Grenada, isl. West Indies, about 20 miles from N. to S. and 10 wide in the centre, but gradually narrowing towards each extremity; discovered by Christopher Columbus, in the year 1498; 71 NW. Tobago, 123 SW. Barbadoes. Lon. 61. 48. W. Lat. 12. 3. N. Pop. in 1815, 31,362; whites 771; free people of colour 1,210; slaves 29,381. A chain of mountains crosses it from N. to S., in the centre of which is a large lake, from which several rivers take their rise. Near the coast the soil is good, and produces indigo, sugar, and tobacco; coffee, cocoa, and cotton. Game is abundant. Among the birds the most common are turtles and parroquets. The chief river fish are eels, mullets, and cray-fish. Ten rivers run into the sea towards the E., 3 to the N., 8 to the W., and 5 to the SE., all sufficient to drive sugar-mills, and capable of becoming harbours for vessels. The principal harbours are Port Louis and St. George.

Grenada, t. Guatemala, in Nicaragua, situated on the lake of Nicaragua, by which means it has a communication with the Pacific ocean and the Carribbean sea; 30 SSE. Leon. Lon. 87. 46. W. Lat. 10. 12. N. Its commerce is considerable in indigo, cochineal, hides, and sugar. It has 2 convents of monks.

Grenada, (New), late viceroyalty, S. A. called the New Kingdom of Grenada, now forming a part of the republic of Colombia, bounded N. by the Carribbean sea and Guatemala, E. by Venezuela and Guiana, S. by the Amazon and Peru, and W. by the Pacific ocean. Lat. 6. S. to 12. N.; 1,200 miles in length, and 276 in mean breadth. This country, together with Venezuela, was formerly called Terra Firma.

Divisions. It was formerly divided into 3 audiences, Panama, Santa Fé, and Quito; and subdivided into 24 provinces, but a new division has been made since New Grenada and Venezuela have been united, and formed into a republic.

Population. In 1820, the population of New Grenada was estimated at 1,600,000; of Venezuela at 900,000; total 2,500,000.—The population of the republic of Colombia composed of New Grenada and Venezuela, according to a statement recently published, is as follows:

Seven departments . . .	2,014,604
Quito estimated at . . .	550,000
Panama and Veragua . . .	80,000

Total . . . 2,644,604

Towns. The chief towns are Santa Fé de Bogota, the capital, Quito, Popayan, Carthagena, Cuenca, Riobamba, Otobalo, Guayaquil, Panama, Merida, St. Miguel d'Ibarra, Latacunga, Loxa, Porto Bello, and St. Martha.

Universities. There are universities at Santa Fé de Bogota, Quito, and Popayan.

Rivers. The principal rivers are the Magdalena, Cauca, Apure, Meta, Putumayo, and Caqueta.

Face of the country. New Grenada abounds in the most sublime mountain scenery. The great chain of the Andes traverses this country from north to south, and within the audience of Quito are found the lofty summits of Chimborazo, Pinchinca, Cotopaxi, &c. From the great chain secondary ridges are thrown out, which diverge westward, and penetrate the country, till they are gradually lost in vast and interminable plains.

Climate. The climate is various. The summits of the mountain are covered with perpetual snow, while in the valleys and low plains the heat is intense. The elevated plains enjoy a temperate, unvaried, and delightful climate.

Soil and productions. The soil in the valleys and plains is fertile, producing cotton, tobacco, corn, coffee, cochineal, a great variety of vegetables, and tropical fruits. Excellent dye-woods, and the finest mahogany are obtained.

Minerals. The mountains of this country are extremely rich in gold and silver, and have also mines of platina, copper, lead, and emeralds. The value of gold and silver produced annually is stated at £650,000 sterling. There are 2 mints, at Santa Fé and Popayan.—See Colombia and Venezuela.

Groningen	53,138
Damme	40,741
Winschotten	41,743

Total 135,621

The country is level, low, and wet; intersected by numerous canals for the purpose of draining, and protected by dikes against the inundations of the sea. The chief wealth of the province consists in its pastures, which are uncommonly rich, and feed excellent cattle.

Groningen, city, Neth., capital of the province of Groningen, on the rivers Hunse and Fivel; 81 W. Bremen. Lon. 6. 24. E. Lat. 53. 11. N. Pop. 26,044. H. 6,000. Churches 12. It is large, rich, strong, well peopled, and adorned with many excellent buildings, public and private; its figure is nearly round, encompassed with good ramparts, guarded by large ditches filled with water, besides many bastions and other fortifications, which would render an attack upon it very difficult. Its port is very commodious, into which ships enter with great ease by means of a canal, whose sides are lined with large stones, about 9 miles from the sea. The university of Groningen, founded in 1614, and endowed with the revenues of several monasteries, has long borne a respectable character. It consists of 5 faculties with 19 professors, and has a good library. Here are also academies for drawing, navigation, and agriculture, an institution for the deaf and dumb, and societies of lawyers and physicians.—Natives, Hemsterhuis, Schultens, Wessel.

Guadaloupe, island in the West Indies, belonging to France, and one of the largest and most valuable of the Caribbee islands, and one of those called Leeward islands; between 60 & 70 miles long, and 25, where widest, broad. Lon. 61. to 62. 5. W. Lat. 15. 45. to 16. 37. N. Pop. in 1812, 114,839; of whom 12,747 were whites, 7,764 free negroes, and 94,328 slaves. It is divided into two parts by a channel, about a league and a half over, called the Salt River, navigable only for canoes, which runs N. & S. and communicates with the sea on both sides by a large bay at each end; that on the N. is called Grand Cul de Sac, and that on the S. Petit Cul de Sac. The E. part of the island is called Grand Terre, and is about 57 miles from Antigua point on the NW., to the point of Guadaloupe on the SE., and about 29 miles in the middle, where broadest; this part is about 120 miles in circ. The W. part, which is properly Guadaloupe, according to Laet, is subdivided by a ridge of mountains into Capes-terre on the W., and Basse-terre on the east. This is 36 miles from N. to S., and 23 where broadest; and about 120 in circuit. Both parts would be joined by an isthmus six miles in breadth, were it not cut through by the river. Guadaloupe has an exceedingly fertile soil, and produces sugar, coffee, indigo, cocoa, cotton, &c. The air is clear and healthy. Basseterre town is the capital.

Chiapa	Chiapa.	Nicaragua	Leon
Vera Paz	Vera Paz.	Honduras	Valladolid.
Guatemala	GUATIMALA.	Costa Rica	Carthage.

Rivers and Lakes. The rivers are numerous but small. The largest are the Chiapa and St. Juan. The lakes are those of Nicaragua and Leon.

Face of the country. The whole country is mountainous, but the particular ridges are but little known. On the western shore the country is subject to the most tremendous convulsions of nature, which have involved at times whole cities in ruins, and exterminated complete tribes of people. No less than 20 volcanoes are known to exist, which are in constant activity; some of them terrific.

Soil and productions. The soil is described as exceedingly fertile, and better cultivated than most other parts of Spanish America; and according to Humboldt, this country is the most populous of the Spanish provinces. It produces abundantly, grain, cochineal, honey, wax, cotton, sugar cane, indigo, pimento, and chocolate. Cattle and sheep are abundant. The bay of Honduras is celebrated for its trade in log-wood.

Climate. The temperature in some parts is exceedingly hot and moist. The rains last from April to September, and violent storms are frequent. The climate is more healthy on the western coast than on the eastern.

Guatemala has heretofore been, and is still claimed as a colony of Spain, styled the Captain-generalship of Guatemala, governed by a captain-general, appointed by the king; but it was declared independent by the people, Sept. 15, 1821.

It extends along the Pacific ocean about 130 leagues, and is in some places 30 or 40 broad. It is mountainous; the climate hot and moist, the valleys fertile; the productions, cattle, grain, cochineal, cotton, and indigo.

Guatemala, (St. Jago de, or Santiago de,) city, capital of the above country and province. Lon. 92. 40. W. Lat. 14. 28. N. Pop. about 20,000. Abp. see. It is situated on the Rio Vaccas, and has a good harbour. It is a magnificent place, adorned with churches, monasteries, and a university. It abounds in chocolate, pitch, naptha, wheat, maize, cocoa, and all kinds of fruit. It was founded in 1524, first built on the declivity of a mountain, at whose summit was a volcano, called the volcano of Guatemala, in a beautiful valley 3 miles in breadth, opening to the Pacific ocean, and it was then called St. Jago. In 1751, it was overwhelmed by an earthquake and by matter from the volcano. The surviving inhabitants proceeded to rebuild it, but another convulsion, in 1775, destroyed the place, burying the greater part of the inhabitants in the ruins. The city was again rebuilt where it now stands, 25 miles south of the old town. Before the earthquake, in 1751, it contained 7,000 families.

GUIANA, extensive country, S. A., bounded N. by the Orinoco and the Atlantic, E. by the Atlantic, S. by the Amazon, and W. by New-Grenada. Lon. 50. to 70. 20. W. Lat. 3. S. to 8. 20. N. It is divided into 4 parts, Dutch, French, Portuguese, and Spanish Guiana.

Guiana, along the sea shore for a considerable distance into the interior, is uniformly level, and of great fertility. In advancing into the interior, the country rises into mountains, many of which are sandy and barren, some of them containing minerals; interspersed with fertile valleys. The country is generally overspread with the most luxuriant vegetation, and produces many rare and valuable plants, and various kinds of wood much esteemed for ornamental furniture. The climate is mild for a tropical region. The country is intersected by the tributary streams of the Amazon and Orinoco. The principal rivers flowing into the Atlantic are Essequibo, Demerara, Berbice, Canje, Surinam, Maroni, and Oyapok.

Dutch Guiana is bounded N. by the Atlantic, E. and S. by French Guiana, and W. by Spanish Guiana; extending from the river Maroni on the east, to Cape Nassau on the west. The eastern part, called Surinam, belongs to the Netherlands, and the western part, including the settlements of Berbice, Demarara, and Essequibo, belongs to Great Britain. See Surinam, Berbice, Demarara, and Essequibo.

French Guiana is bounded N. by Dutch Guiana, NE. and E. by the Atlantic, S. by Portuguese Guiana, and W. by Spanish and Dutch Guiana. This province is also called Cayenne, from its principal town. P. 33,500. See Cayenne.

Portuguese Guiana is bounded N. by Spanish and French Guiana, S. by the Amazon, and W. by New-Grenada. It is united to the kingdom of Brazil.

Spanish Guiana is bounded NW. and N. by the Orinoco, E. by the Atlantic, Dutch, and French Guiana, S. by Portuguese Guiana, and W. by New-Grenada. It forms a province of Venezuela or Caraccas, and is separated from the other provinces by the Orinoco. The interior of the country is woody and mountainous, interspersed with fine fertile valleys, yielding corn and pasture. The exports consist of cattle, mules, dyeing drugs, gums, medicinal roots, sugar, tobacco, Brazil and other woods. It is very thinly peopled. Pop. estimated at 34,000. Chief town, St. Thomas.

Churches 15. The church of St. Bavon, once a cathedral, is one of the largest and handsomest churches in Holland, and contains a collection of antiquities of the time of the crusades, with an organ considered one of the largest and most perfect instruments of the kind in the world. It was built in 1738, and has 8,000 pipes, and is the grand attraction in Haerlem to travellers. Haerlem contains a town library, an anatomical theatre, a botanic garden, and an academy of sciences with a museum. The stadthouse is a grand building, situated at one end of the market place; and in it are many valuable pictures.

Haerlem carries on considerable manufactories in linen, ribbands, and tape; and exports great quantities of beer to Friesland and other places. Here is also a great trade in flowers, particularly tulips. Mr. Dutens says he saw a hyacinth in May 1771, for which the owner refused 10,000 florins.—Haerlem boasts of the honour of having given birth to Lawrence Coster, who, as they pretend, was the first inventor of printing, which happened about the year 1440.

Pop. 15, or 16,000. It is built on the declivity of a hill, which rises 236 feet above the level of the sea. It is about 2 miles long, laid out in regular squares; the streets are parallel and at right angles. The harbour is open at all seasons, of bold and easy entrance, and spacious enough to contain 1,000 of the largest ships in entire safety. The imports from Great Britain alone amounted, in 1810, to £600,000. The town is entrenched with forts of timber. At the north extremity of the town is the royal navy yard, completely built, and supplied with stores of every kind for the navy. This is the chief station for the British navy in the northern part of America. The country around the town is rocky, and the soil unfit for cultivation.

Halifax, t. Eng., in W. Riding of Yorkshire; 18 SW. Leeds, 40 SW. York, 197 NW. London. Lon. 1. 55. W. Lat. 53. 44. N. Pop. of the town, 9,159; of the parish, 73,515. It is situated on a gentle eminence, washed by a branch of the river Calder, and is surrounded on all sides by high hills. Being in the midst of numerous waters adapted for mills and machinery, in the vicinity of the great wool districts, and not far from an abundant supply of coals, and being connected by the Calder navigation with Hull on the east, and by Rochdale canal with Liverpool, Manchester, &c. on the west, it has become one of the principal seats of the woollen manufacture in the kingdom. The Cloth or Piece Hall is a large and elegant edifice of stone, erected for the convenience of the manufacturers, containing 315 separate rooms for the reception of goods. Goods to the amount of £50,000 are often exposed to sale at a time. The town is well built of stone and brick. The parish is one of the largest in England, 20 m. long, and 17 wide, containing no fewer than 26 villages. The country is naturally a desert, but, by the industry of the inhabitants, is converted into a highly cultivated district.

Pop. in 1810, 2,068; in 1820, 2,919. It is situated on both sides of the Kennebec, and has Augusta north, and Gardiner and Pittston south, and contains 4 houses of public worship, 1 for Congregationalists, 1 for Baptists, and 2 for Methodists. The principal village is situated on a fine basin on the west side of the river, and contains an academy, two circulating libraries, a bank, 4 printing offices, and 1,942 inhabitants. The village is built chiefly upon three streets, two of which are parallel with the river, and the other at right angles. The houses are principally of wood, but the stores, especially those erected within a few years, are almost entirely of brick, and are built in a superior style. There are 10 wharfs on the west bank of the river, and 1 ropewalk. To the westward a high hill extends from north to south, the whole length of the village, on the slope of which 3 new streets are laid out, which are intersected by two others at right angles. Hallowell is a thriving town, and has a flourishing commerce. It is situated in a tract of country which has a strong and fertile soil, particularly excellent for grazing. The exports consist of beef, pork, pot and pearl ashes, Indian corn, wheat, rye, oats, butter, hay, lumber, fish, &c. Loaded vessels of 150 tons may come up the river as far as the wharfs. A large mill, on the plan of the southern merchant flour mills, is in successful operation in this town.—Besides the principal village, there are two other small ones within the township, one stretching along the road towards Gardiner, the other lying towards Winthrop to the west. The state of society in this town is reputed excellent, and here is the residence of Benjamin Vaughan, LLD.

Hamadan, or Amadan, (supposed to be on or near the site of an. Ecbatana,) city, Persia, in Irak; 240 NW. Ispahan, 160 NE. Bagdad. Lon. 48. E. Lat. 35. 15. N. Pop. 40 or 50,000. H. 12,000, meanly built. It contains numerous mosques and bazars, and is situated at the foot of a mountain, well watered by a number of springs; the environs producing excellent corn and rice. It lies in a road, and forms a stage for the caravans going to Mecca and Bagdad, and the inhabitants carry on a considerable trade. The Jews suppose that Queen Esther and Mordecai were buried here, and accordingly flock hither in pilgrimage to visit their tombs.

Hamah, (an. Hamath, Epiphania, or Apamea,) t. Syria, pachalic of Damascus, in a narrow valley, on the Orontes; 62 SSW. Aleppo, 122 N. Damascus. Lon. 37. 10. E. Lat. 34. 45. N. Pop. according to Ali Bey, 80, or 90,000. It is open to the E. and W. which is the course the river takes here; and without the town are pleasant gardens on each side of the river; the air of it is looked on as unwholesome. It is in a manner three towns; the principal town being on S. side of the river. The city and suburbs stand on a great compass of ground, and contains many mosques. As many parts of the town are much higher than the Orontes, they have a method of raising the water by a great number of wheels in the river, made with boxes round them, by which the water is raised to several aqueducts, consisting of very high arches, which, if well built, might be compared to some of the Roman works. The city is now in a very flourishing condition, it being the only town to which the Arabs of the eastern desert about Tadmor can come, in order to be supplied with what they want. Abulfeda, the Arabian geographer, was born here in 1273.

Hamburgh, free city, Ger., in Lower Saxony, on the north bank of the Elbe, 70 miles from its mouth; 38 SW. Lubec, 54 NE. Bremen, 84 N. Hanover, 448 NE. London. Lon. 9. 59. E. Lat. 53. 33. N. Pop. in 1809, 106,920; 2,000 Catholics, 4,000 Reformed, 6,000 Jews, 500 Mennonists, &c., the rest Lutherans. It contains 5 large and 11 small Lutheran chh., 2 Reformed churches, 1 cathedral, 2 synagogues, 23 hospitals, 23,201 buildings, 227 streets, a celebrated gymnasium with 6 professors, other seminaries, several libraries, one of which contains about 100,000 volumes.

Hamburgh is the first commercial city in Germany, and before the French revolution, it ranked as the third in Europe. It is very advantageously situated for trade, having a spacious harbour, with an easy access to the sea, and an extensive communication with the interior of Germany by means of the Elbe. The river expanded by the influx of the tide, is here a great body of water, from 3 to 6 miles wide. The city is much intersected by water communications formed partly by the Elbe, partly by the Alster; and the small river Bill flows on the east side. The bridges over the canals are computed at 84. The city covers a large extent of ground, but nearly one third of the space included within the walls, is occupied by canals, piers, and a large basin formed by the Alster. There are 6 gates, 4 towards the land, and 2 towards the water. A portion of the ground on which the city is built, is rather elevated, but in the insulated part, the streets are overflowed by the highest tides.

Hamburgh is by no means elegant in the interior. The streets are narrow, crooked, and irregular, and the houses awkward and old fashioned. They are generally of great height, and built of brick and wood. In the quarter called the New Town, however, there are many handsome houses, and some elegant streets.—Hamburgh was incorporated into the French empire in 1810. It suffered greatly by the loss of its commerce, and the contributions imposed upon it; but its commerce has again revived. The number of vessels which entered this port in 1799, was 2,423; in 1817, 1,640.—Brewing was formerly the chief employment of the inhabitants; but has now declined. In 1800, there were upwards of 300 houses for refining sugar. This business has decreased, but is still extensive. The printing of cotton, linen, and handkerchiefs, is next in importance. Dye-works and machinery for twisting tobacco are also of considerable extent.—The territory of Hamburgh consists of a small district lying about the city, and the town and bailiwick of Cuxhaven. Sq. m. 133. Pop. including the district, 129,739. Hamburgh is connected with Frankfort, Bremen, and Lubec, in some commercial regulations, and they still retain the old name of Hanse towns.—Natives, Hagedorn, Schiebeler, Basedow, Schroder, J. F. Gronovius, Reimarus, &c.

Hang-tcheou, city, China, of the first rank, capital of Tche-kiang; 600 SSE. Peking. Lon. 119. 46. E. Lat. 30. 20. N. It is one of the richest and largest cities of the empire, called by the Chinese The Terrestrial Paradise, and said to contain 1,000,000 souls, situated between the basin of the Grand canal and the river Tsientang, which falls into the sea at the distance of little more than 60 miles to the eastward. The tide, when full, increases the width of this river to about 4 miles, opposite to the city. It has nothing grand in its appearance except its walls: the houses are low, none exceed two stories; the streets are narrow; they are paved with large, smooth flags in the middle, and with small flat stones on each side. The chief streets consist entirely of shops and warehouses, many not inferior to the most splendid of the kind in London. A brisk and extensive trade seems to be carried on in silks, and not a little in furs, and English broadcloths. The country around produces great quantities of excellent silk; and in raising it they assert that 60,000 people are employed in the towns and villages round about.

Hanover, p-t. Grafton co. N. H., on E. side of the Connecticut; 53 NW. Concord, 102 WNW. Portsmouth, 115 NW. Boston, W. 495. Pop. 2,222. Dartmouth College is situated in SW. part of this township, about half a mile E. of the river, on a beautiful plain, where there is a handsome village of about 60 houses, with a Congregational meeting house; about five miles to the NE. of which, within the township, there is another Congregational meeting house. At the village there is a handsome bridge across the river, connecting the town with Norwich.

Dartmouth College was founded by Dr. Eleazer Wheelock, and chartered by royal grant, in 1769. The funds, which were originally created by charitable individuals, have been increased by grants from the legislatures of New-Hampshire and Vermont; and afford, at present, an increasing annual income of about 1,600 dollars. The buildings consist of 2 handsome edifices, one styled College Hall, 150 feet by 50, of 3 stories, containing 34 rooms for under-graduates, and 2 for other purposes; the other, styled Medical Hall, a brick edifice of 3 stories, containing a laboratory, a room for the anatomical museum, 2 lecture rooms, and 9 rooms for medical students; a chapel, and a dining hall. The college library contains upwards of 5,000 volumes, the medical library about 500, and 2 libraries belonging to college societies about 3,300 each, making in all upwards of 12,000 vols. The college has a good philosophical apparatus, an extensive chemical apparatus, a large anatomical museum, and a valuable cabinet of minerals.

The executive government is entrusted to a president and 8 professors, one of theology, one of mathematics and natural philosophy, one of the Latin and Greek languages and literature, one of rhetoric and oratory, one of surgery, obstetrics, and legal medicine, one of the theory and practice of physic, materia medica, and botany, one of chemistry, mineralogy, and the application of science to the arts, and one of anatomy and physiology; and 2 tutors. The number of under graduates, in 1822, was about 160; medical students, 65. There is a grammar school connected with the college, which has about 50 students. The medical department was established in 1798. The lectures commence with the college fall term, and continue 3 months. Commencement is held on the Wednesday preceding the last Wednesday in August. There are 3 vacations; the 1st, from commencement, 4 weeks; the 2d, from the 1st Monday in January, 7 weeks; the 3d, from the Monday preceding the last Wednesday in May, 2½ weeks.

The boundaries include the grand duchy of Oldenburg, part of the duchy of Brunswick, and the city of Bremen, all independent of Hanover. Lon. 6. 51. to 11. 51. E. Lat. 51. 18. to 53. 54. N.

In 1815, East Friesland, Hildesheim, the town of Gosslar with its district, the lower county of Lingen, with some petty districts, were annexed to Hanover; containing together a population of upwards of 200,000. In return Hanover ceded to Prussia only a small territory on the right of the Elbe, and a still smaller one in the western part to the grand duke of Oldenburg. Hanover now contains the following 11 provinces. The late principality of Grubenhagen now forms a part of the province of Göttingen.

Provinces.	Sq.m.	Pop.	Capital.

Government. Hanover, although a member of the Germanic confederation, is governed by the king of Great Britain, who is also styled king of Hanover. It is now governed by a viceroy appointed by the king, assisted by a parliamentary body.

Religion. The religion is Lutheran. There are 152,000 Catholics, 40,000 Calvinists, 8,200 Jews, 400 Mennonists; the rest Lutherans.

Education. The university of Göttingen is well known. There are also academies or gymnasia at Hanover, Lüneburg, Hildesheim, Osnaburg, Lingen, Ilfeld, &c. There are elementary schools in every village.

Face of the country, soil, &c. With the exception of the Hartz and other elevated tracts in the south, the territory of Hanover consists of an immense plain with only gentle undulations. In the south the valleys are fertile; in the north there are many barren heaths and moors; the most productive tracts are those along the banks of the rivers, which have been reclaimed from a marshy state.—The climate is generally healthy, though the marshes in some parts produce noisome exhalations.

Productions. The mountain tract, called Hartz, is valuable for its forests, and still more so for its mines of silver, iron, copper, lead, zinc, sulphur, and vitriol.—The productions of Hanover, are wheat, barley, oats, rye, buckwheat, hemp, flax, tobacco, madder, potatoes, various other vegetables; cattle, horses, and sheep.

Trade and manufactures. Neither of these are carried on extensively in Hanover. Emden is the only town that has any maritime trade of consequence. There are manufactures at Osnaburg, and some other places.

Rivers. The principal rivers are the Elbe, Weser, Ems, Leine, Ocker, Ilmenau, &c.

Hanover, city, Ger., capital of the kingdom of Hanover, and of the province of Calenberg, on the Leine, which divides it into two parts, called the Old and New Town; 28 W. Brunswick, 58 SE. Bremen, 150 W. Berlin. Lon. 9. 43. E. Lat. 52. 22. N. Pop. in 1811, 20,038; in 1819, about 25,000. H. 2,095. It contains 5 Lutheran churches, 1 Calvinist, 1 Catholic, 1 synagogue, 2 hospitals, an orphan house, and 2 poor-houses. The elector's palace, now the residence of the viceroy, has been recently repaired, and rendered an elegant modern edifice. Hanover contains a gymnasium, a seminary, styled the Georgianum, for the education of 40 sons of Hanoverian nobles, and a public library founded by Leibnitz, containing the archives of the kingdom, and a valuable collection of books. Other objects of interest are the mews, the church of the castle, some fine gardens, the wood of Ellenztied, the Lutheran burying ground, and a country royal mansion, at some distance from the town, with a garden containing a very interesting botanical collection.

Hanover is situated in a sandy though picturesque district, and its appearance at a distance is singular and romantic. On entering the town, it exhibits an antiquated appearance. The materials for building are generally brick, with wooden frame work, painted so as to afford an imperfect imitation of stone. The inhabitants derive their chief support from the presence of the court and the residence of the gentry; and also from manufactures, on a small scale, of gold and silver lace, printing cotton and linen, brewing, &c., and some trade. It has four annual fairs.—Natives, Island, W. A. & Fr. Schlegel, and Dr. Herschel.

Hanse Towns, a celebrated association which commenced about 1140, and which afterwards comprised most of the commercial towns in Europe. Hanse is an obsolete word, which in High Dutch, signifies confederacy or alliance. No cities were admitted into the Hanseatic league except such as were situated on the sea, or on some navigable river. The members of this powerful association, formed the first systematic plan of commerce known in the middle ages. The end of the 14th century and the beginning of the 15th, were the most flourishing times of this alliance, which then embraced 64 commercial towns. The members were divided into 4 colleges or provinces, distinguished by the names of their 4 principal towns, which were Lubec, Cologne, Brunswick, and Dantzic. Lubec was the head of the whole hanse. The hanse association had also 4 principal factories, or staples, called comptoirs; these were London, Bruges, Novgorod, and Bergen; that of Bruges was afterwards removed to Antwerp. In 1630 this confederacy was dissolved. At present the Hanseatic league comprises only 4 cities, Hamburg, Lubec, Bremen, and Frankfort on the Maine. They have a vote in the Germanic diet, and have a commercial treaty with each other, and a court of appeal at Lubec.

Harper's Ferry, p-v. Jefferson co. Va., at the junction of the Shenandoah with the Potomac; 8 ENE. Charlestown, 30 NE. Winchester, 65 WNW. Washington. The celebrated passage of the Potomac, at this place, is an object truly grand and magnificent. The eye takes in at a glance, on the north side of the Potomac and Shenandoah at their junction, an impetuous torrent foaming and dashing over numerous rocks, which have tumbled from precipices that overhung them, the picturesque tops and sides of the mountains, the gentle and winding current of the river below the ridge, presenting altogether a landscape capable of awakening the most delightful and sublime emotions. "This scene," says Mr. Jefferson, "is worth a voyage across the Atlantic."—There is at this place, belonging to the United States, a very extensive establishment for the manufacture of arms. It was founded in 1798, and now employs about 260 workmen. There are 8 large brick buildings, 6 on the Potomac, and 2 on the Shenandoah, 2 miles distant, occupied by the works; also 2 large brick buildings occupied as an arsenal.

Pop. of the township in 1800, 5,347; in 1810, 6,003; in 1820, 6,901; of the city in 1810, 3,955; in 1820, 4,726. It has a pleasant and advantageous situation at the head of sloop navigation, and is surrounded by a fertile and beautiful country; and it is very extensively connected with large towns in various directions, by means of good roads. It contains a handsome state house of stone and brick, 2 market houses, 2 banks, an arsenal, an academy, 2 insurance offices, a library of 2,600 volumes, a museum, an asylum for the deaf and dumb, and 6 houses of public worship, 4 of them within the city, viz. 2 for Congregationalists, 1 for Episcopalians, and 1 for Baptists. The principal street is about $1\frac{1}{2}$ m. long, extending through the city parallel with the river. This and other streets in a similar direction, are intersected by streets extending back from the river, but not uniformly at right angles. The city is generally well built, particularly the main street, on which many of the houses are elegant brick edifices. The new Congregational meeting house is one of the most elegant structures in the state. An elegant bridge with 6 arches, 974 feet long, is erected over the Connecticut, connecting the city with East Hartford.

Hartford has a flourishing commerce. The shipping owned here, in 1818, amounted to 9,377 tons. It has an extensive inland trade, and a variety of manufactures; as leather, shoes, coaches, cotton and woollen goods, saddlery, brass work, &c. It has 10 printing offices, from 4 of which newspapers are issued; 7 book stores, and 22 practising lawyers. The general assembly has one session annually, and meets alternately at Hartford and New Haven.—The Indian name of Hartford was Suckiang. It was first settled by the English in 1635.—The Asylum for educating the deaf and dumb was opened here in 1817; and is the first institution of the kind in America. The instructors consist of a principal and 4 assistants; the number of pupils about 50. Candidates for admission must not be under 9, nor over 30 years of age. The whole annual charge to each is \$200. The success of this interesting and benevolent institution, and the improvement of the pupils have been highly gratifying. It has received a donation from the congress of the U. States of upwards of 23,000 acres of land. The building of the asylum is a handsome brick edifice, delightfully situated on an elevation $\frac{1}{2}$ mile west of the city.
